1. Findings of two studies related to the scope of crime, and the findings of the 1996 National Institute of Justice study related to the cost of crime. (1-3 to 1-5)
2. Four movements that opened the way for the victims’ rights discipline. (1-12)
3. Five historical stages of the victims’ rights discipline. (1-13 to 1-27)

Objectives:

1. Describe and understand the five stages that contributed to the development of the victim assistance field.
2. Identify each of the five historical stages’ respective contributions to the discipline of victims’ rights.

Description of Activity and Faculty Guidelines:

The instructor provides a slide presentation that includes the three key concepts/objectives. Students are divided into small groups (no more than 12 in each group).

A representative from each group will select “one historical stage” by pulling it out of a hat. Students are instructed: “Based upon your reading of Chapter 1 and the presentation, take 15 minutes to prepare a three-minute skit representing that stage’s contribution to the field of victims’ rights.”

Student skits are presented to the full group in order of the stages (one through five), with a few minutes provided at the end of this learning activity for instructor processing and summarization.
