PREFACE

This is the sixth in a series of compendia of state statutes and regulations governing the collection, maintenance, and dissemination of criminal history records issued by the Bureau of Justice Statistics. The ongoing purpose of this publication series is to provide assistance to policymakers and analysts, as well as other interested persons, in reviewing and analyzing this important area of the law.

The Bureau of Justice Statistics has long been committed to enhancing the quality and reliability of criminal history records and to encouraging discussion of appropriate policies regarding the security and privacy of data. Recognizing that laws and procedures must strike a workable balance between our ability to collect accurate information and the need to protect the privacy interests of individuals, the Bureau of Justice Statistics hopes that this compendium will be a useful reference in the development of fair and effective policies.

INTRODUCTION

The Compendium Series

This compendium is the latest in a series of six Department of Justice publications that reference and analyze state laws and regulations relating to privacy and security of criminal history record information.<sup>1</sup> The compendia include: (1) compilations of state laws and administrative regulations, and (2) analyses of findings and trends reflected in that body of law and policy documents. The purpose of the compendia is to assist legislators, planners, administrators, legal analysts and other interested individuals in reviewing state statutes and regulations on the maintenance and use of criminal records and analyzing national trends in this important area. By contrasting and comparing the various approaches reflected in the many state laws and regulations cited in these documents, planners and administrators should be assisted in developing effective and fair policies for their jurisdictions. By facilitating such comparisons and by furthering research in this area, the compendia are intended to promote the evolution of enlightened privacy and information policy.

The first compendium was published by the Law Enforcement Assistance Administration (LEAA) in 1974 as part of its efforts connected with the promulgation of regulations covering the privacy and security of criminal history record information.<sup>2</sup> A second compendium was published in 1978,<sup>3</sup> documenting the growth of state privacy and security laws subsequent to the earlier survey. At that time LEAA also published a companion document<sup>4</sup> providing an overview of the significant changes in state laws that had occurred, largely as a result of the impact of the federal regulations, and analyzing policy issues in specific areas of privacy and security law. Updating supplements to those compendia were published in 1979<sup>5</sup> and in 1981,<sup>6</sup> covering state legislation and regulations up to July 1981. The 1984 volume replaced all of the earlier volumes in the series and referenced all state laws and regulations up to January 1984<sup>7</sup>.

Scope of this Compendium

This compendium is an up-to-date and complete document which replaces all of the earlier volumes in the series. It references all current state laws up to September 1987, as well as regulations, executive orders and attorneys general's opinions where applicable. It also includes a review and analysis section containing a general overview of state laws and regulations and a discussion of trends and conclusions concerning two especially important information policy issues: (1) requirements imposed on criminal justice agencies to maintain record quality, and (2) dissemination and use of criminal history information for noncriminal justice purposes.

Since this volume compiles the material from previous compendia as well as more recent enactments, the sheer bulk of this body of material precludes continuation of the practice of reproducing the complete text of the state laws and regulations. Copies of specific statutes or the complete set of statutes are available on microfiche from the National Criminal Justice Reference Service (NCJRS) in Rockville, Maryland. A full, hard copy library of these laws, regulations and other materials is maintained by SEARCH Group, Inc. at its offices in Sacramento. Copies of specific enactments may be ordered by mail or telephone.

This compendium contains four sections. Section 1 sets out an overview of state criminal history record laws and an analysis of state requirements relating to data quality and noncriminal justice access and use. Section 2 defines the 28 subject-matter categories into which the laws and regulations are classified in the tables in the compendium. These categories are the same as those used in previous volumes. Section 3 sets out summary tables showing trends and developments in criminal justice information law and policy by classification category. Section 4 includes summary tables by state, along with a listing of the titles of the state codes (see page 49) from which the citations were extracted. All of the tables in Sections 3 and 4 set out complete citations to the official state codes or other state compilations where the full text of the laws and regulations may be found. These citations should be used in ordering copies of particular provisions from NCJRS or SEARCH.

The methodology utilized in compiling the compendium included extensive library research in state codes and a survey of state officials concerned with criminal record programs and policy. The survey and research compiled the laws of 53 jurisdictions: the 50 states, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands. In the compendium, all of these jurisdictions are referred to as "states."

How to Use the Compendium

Because this volume is a complete compilation of all prior compendia and supplements, it will not be necessary to consult prior volumes.

To facilitate use of this volume, the laws and regulations have been classified into 28 subject-matter categories which are defined in Section 2. Numerous tables have been included in Sections 3 and 4 to assist in finding laws dealing with particular subjects or to determine which aspects of information policy have been addressed by particular states. The summary tables in Section 3 list citations to all state statutes and regulations under each of the 28 classification categories. For example, the table for the category "State Regulatory Authority" (page 20) indicates which of the states have provisions establishing or designating an agency to promulgate statewide privacy and security regulations and provides the legal citations to the provisions. In addition to finding particular citations, the reader is able to quickly identify the concentration of states addressing a particular policy area.

Another view of state privacy and security trends is reflected in the table on page 18, entitled "Survey Comparison of Changes in State Statutes and Regulations by Classification Category." At a glance, the table indicates the degree of attention that a particular area of information policy has received in the states over the past 13 years, as reflected by surveys conducted in 1974, 1977, 1979, 1981, 1984 and 1987.

A summary table for each state is included in Section 4. These tables utilize the 28 classification categories referred to above and set out citations to all of the laws and regulations of particular states. If no entry appears under one or more classification categories for a particular state, it means that the state has no law or regulation addressing that policy area, or that research has failed to discover any.

The state summary tables presented in Section 4 include subdivisions of four classification categories. Category 3, "Regulation of Dissemination," has been subdivided to show whether the states permit or prohibit access by various types of groups or individuals (criminal justice agencies, governmental noncriminal justice agencies and private agencies or individuals) to various types of information (conviction information, nonconviction information and arrest information). Category 4, "Right to Inspect," has been subdivided to show whether the states permit an individual to make notes or obtain a copy of information contained in his criminal record. Category 14, "Accuracy and Completeness," has been subdivided to permit statutes to be classified as relating to disposition reporting, audit, or other accuracy and completeness requirements. Finally, Category 22, "Security," has been subdivided to enable statutes to be classified as relating to physical security, administrative security or computer security. It is felt that these classification subcategories will present a more accurate and detailed view of state legislative and regulatory activity in these four important policy areas and will make the compendium a much more useful research tool.

REVIEW AND ANALYSIS

A. Current Status of the Law

In the early 1970's, at a time when public concern about privacy, automation and mushrooming information systems was at its height, Congress considered several legislative proposals that would have imposed a uniform nationwide information management scheme for state and local handling of criminal history record information. Although comprehensive legislation failed to pass, Congress did adopt a short amendment to the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968 (now Section 812(b) of the Justice Assistance Act of 1984; P.L. 98-473) providing in general terms that all criminal history record information collected, maintained or disseminated by state and local criminal justice agencies with financial support from LEAA or its successor agencies must be kept complete and secure, must be made available for review and challenge by record subjects, and must be used only for law enforcement and other lawful purposes.

This amendment served as the basis for comprehensive information systems regulations issued by LEAA in 1975 applicable to all state and local criminal justice agencies which have utilized LEAA funding for the support of criminal history record systems. This includes virtually all state-level criminal justice agencies and perhaps one-half of the local criminal justice agencies in the country, including most of the large local agencies. The regulations, usually referred to as the Department of Justice (DOJ) regulations, have encouraged the development of standards for the handling of criminal history record information.<sup>8</sup>

The DOJ regulations impose minimum general requirements for criminal history information management, leaving the development of specific programs and procedures to state legislation and policymaking. As intended, the regulations were instrumental in stimulating many states to enact their own laws to comply with the requirements of the federal government. In addition, the regulations triggered a reassessment of existing state privacy and security laws that has gone beyond mere compliance, as evidenced by the fact that about half of the states have enacted comprehensive criminal history laws, some of which are in some respects stricter than the requirements of the regulations.

Today, virtually all of the states have enacted legislation governing the dissemination of criminal history records. Although the approaches differ considerably, all of the states have followed the lead of the regulations in distinguishing between conviction and current arrest data, on the one hand, and nonconviction data on the other. Most states have placed stricter limits on the release of nonconviction data for noncriminal justice purposes. Virtually all of the states also have established procedures to permit record subjects to review their records and to institute procedures to correct inaccuracies. Finally, virtually all of the states have established security procedures complying generally with the requirements of the regulations. In these areas, as in other areas of record management, the regulations do not require the enactment of legislation, so long as adequate operational procedures are implemented by regulation, agency rule or other appropriate means. Thus, the numbers of state statutes in these areas cited in this volume do not fully reflect the significant progress made in these areas of privacy protection.

Two areas of criminal record information management merit special analysis. These areas are: (1) data quality, and (2) dissemination of criminal records for noncriminal justice purposes. They are discussed in the following sections.

B. ANALYSIS OF CRITICAL ISSUES

1. Data Quality

As noted earlier, the broad language of the 1973 Congressional amendment provided the basis for comprehensive regulations issued by LEAA in 1975 covering all state and local criminal history record systems supported in whole or in part by federal funding.<sup>9</sup> Among other things, the regulations require all covered agencies to implement operational procedures designed to ensure that criminal history record information is complete and accurate.<sup>10</sup>

The regulations state that to be complete a record of an arrest must contain information concerning any disposition occurring within the state within 90 days after the disposition has occurred. In order to promote the dissemination of complete criminal history records, the regulations require that state and local agencies establish procedures to query the central state repository prior to disseminating information unless the agency is assured that it is disseminating the most up-to-date disposition data or time is of the essence and the repository is technically incapable of responding within the necessary time period.<sup>11</sup>

The provisions of the regulations dealing with accuracy<sup>12</sup> define accuracy literally to mean that, "no record containing criminal history record information shall contain erroneous information." In order to promote accuracy, two types of operational procedures are required: (1) a process of data collection, entry, storage and systematic audit that will minimize the possibility of recording and storing inaccurate information, and (2) procedures for sending notices of corrections to all criminal justice agencies known to have received inaccurate information of a material nature. As a practical matter, this provision requires agencies to create and maintain dissemination logs so that corrections can be sent to recipients of erroneous information.

Finally, the regulations require agencies to give criminal record subjects an opportunity, upon request, to review their criminal history record information for purposes of ensuring accuracy and completeness.<sup>13</sup>

State Statutory Provisions

As noted earlier, the regulations do not require the states to enact legislation dealing with accuracy and completeness. However, many states have chosen to deal with the problem by state law. In 1974, just prior to publication of the regulations, only 14 states had adopted statutory data quality safeguards. By 1978, two years after the adoption of the LEAA regulations, 41 states had added data quality provisions of one kind or another to their criminal history record statutes. That number increased to 45 states in 1979, to 49 states in 1981, and to 51 states in 1984. The recent survey showed that the number of jurisdictions that have enacted data quality provisions remained at 51.<sup>14</sup>

Although the regulations do not expressly require that the states establish central state criminal record repositories, the Commentary published with the regulations noted that the provisions on accuracy and completeness were written with central state repositories in mind. Indeed, the provisions of the regulations dealing with completeness state that complete records "should" be maintained in central state repositories.<sup>15</sup> Today, every state as well as the District of Columbia and Puerto Rico have established central state repositories and most of them conform generally to the model described in the Commentary. In virtually all of those states, pursuant to statute, regulation or established practice, law enforcement agencies throughout the state report arrest data for all serious offenses (usually felonies and serious misdemeanors) to the state repositories. Nearly all of the states have statutory provisions expressly requiring the reporting of arrest data. In most of these, arrest data is required to be reported on arrest fingerprint cards, which include the subject's name and identification information, arrest event information (date, place, etc.), arrest charges and inked fingerprint impressions.

Fifty jurisdictions have adopted legislation which imposes some form of disposition reporting requirement on state and local agencies.<sup>16</sup> Many of these statutes are quite specific as to the types of data to be reported, the responsible agency or official, time requirements and sanctions. Others, however, merely state a general reporting requirement with little or no detail as to how or by whom reporting is to be accomplished.

Even in the states with more detailed reporting laws, there are some significant shortcomings. Only 13 states specifically require prosecutors to report data to the central repository<sup>17</sup> and only in a couple of these states are prosecutors required to report all charges filed and other specific prosecutorial "dispositions" to the repository. Even more problematic, only 24 state statutes require the courts (customarily the court clerks) to report disposition information to the central repository.<sup>18</sup> Only 31 states require correctional agencies to report correctional "disposition" information such as escape, release, parole or death.<sup>19</sup>

Other problems with many of the disposition reporting laws include the failure of states to impose time limits for the reporting of disposition data and the lack of meaningful penalties for failure to comply. Only 30 states prescribe time limits for the reporting of disposition data,<sup>20</sup> and only 12 states have adopted provisions which expressly prescribe civil or criminal sanctions for violations of disposition reporting standards.<sup>21</sup> Moreover, research has failed to discover a single reported decision in which a criminal justice official has been penalized for failing to comply with disposition reporting requirements.<sup>22</sup>

Statutes which impose transaction log requirements are the most common type of data quality provision after disposition reporting. Thirty states have adopted statutory provisions which require criminal justice agencies to maintain logs identifying the recipients of criminal history record information and the dates of the disseminations.<sup>23</sup>

Statutes in 24 states require the central repositories to conduct some type of audit.<sup>24</sup> Auditing is generally viewed as one of the most effective data quality procedures. Statutes in 13 of these states require the central repository to conduct an annual audit of a random sample of state and local systems which submit records to the repository.<sup>25</sup> The scope of this kind of random audit usually includes: (1) adherence by the local agency to federal and state regulations; (2) completeness and accuracy of criminal history record information; (3) adherence to dissemination standards; (4) implementation of appropriate security safeguards; and (5) compliance with mandated subject access and review provisions. Eleven states require the repository to conduct an annual in-house audit of its own records.<sup>26</sup> In general, the scope of these audits parallels the scope of the audit of local agency systems. However, statutes in some of these states expressly require that the in-house audit also attempt to identify dispositions which are likely to have occurred but which have not been reported. Statutes in ten of the states require both the in-house audit and an audit of a representative sample of contributing agencies.<sup>27</sup>

Finally, statutory provisions adopted in a few states impose other kinds of data quality mechanisms. Statutes in twelve states require state and local criminal justice agencies to query the central repository prior to disseminating criminal history record information in order to assure that the most up-to-date disposition data is being used.<sup>28</sup> Twelve states have also added provisions to their statutes which require the repository to implement some kind of delinquent disposition monitoring system (e.g., a system designed to identify periodically arrest entries for which dispositions are probably available but not reported).<sup>29</sup> Four states have adopted statutory provisions that specifically impose training requirements on personnel involved in entering data into criminal history record systems.<sup>30</sup> Four states have adopted statutory provisions which address the use of automated programs to provide systematic editing procedures for the purpose of detecting missing or nonconforming data.<sup>31</sup> Three states have adopted statutory provisions which require the use of a "tracking number system" to link disposition information to charge information.<sup>32</sup>

Of course, in almost every state the bulk of data quality requirements are expressed in regulations or administrative policies and procedures, rather than in legislation. However, the extent to which State legislation addresses data quality issues is a reflection of the state's concern about data quality.

It is clear, however, that the enactment of legislation and the issuance of regulations are not enough to solve the problem of data quality. While 51 states have adopted at least some standards for accuracy and completeness that reflect standards in the DOJ Regulations, there is little question that the quality of criminal history data in this nation falls short of satisfactory. Disposition reporting — or the lack of reporting — remains the most serious deficiency, especially in terms of court disposition reporting. Next in importance is auditing. Although numerous states have statutory provisions requiring ongoing systematic audits and annual in-house audits, it is clear that very little audit activity is taking place. It is fair to say that in practice many states have not made data quality a priority sufficient to comply with existing standards.

The issue is commitment: the states must be committed to put into place and practice, procedures to collect and maintain complete and accurate data, and to scrupulously and regularly conduct systematic audits to ensure compliance with those procedures.

2. Access for Noncriminal Justice Purposes

Background

Reversing a trend that began after issuance of the DOJ regulations, criminal history record information is increasingly becoming available outside of the criminal justice system. Even nonconviction data is now being made more available to noncriminal justice agencies. Twenty-nine states have adopted open record or freedom of information statutes which cover some types of criminal history record data. (See the Survey Comparison Table on page 18.) This does not mean that criminal history data is publicly available in these states in all circumstances, but it does mean that the data is more available than it previously was.

As a part of this trend, a majority of the states now permit access to criminal history records by at least some types of noncriminal justice agencies and private entities. For example, special access rights are increasingly accorded to governmental agencies with national security missions and to licensing boards and some private employers screening applicants for sensitive positions, such as those involving public safety, supervision of children or custody of valuable property.

The Congressional efforts of the 1970's to enact federal legislation setting nationwide dissemination standards for state criminal history record systems failed. In addition, the LEAA Regulations on criminal history record systems issued in 1975 did not undertake to set a uniform policy on noncriminal justice access, but instead essentially left the matter up to the legislatures and governors of the individual states. Section 20.21(b)(2) of the regulations provides that noncriminal justice access and use is permitted if "authorized by statute, ordinance, executive order, or court rule, decision or order as construed by appropriate state or local officials or agencies."

This approach, though laudable from the standpoint of states' rights, has resulted in a great diversity of statutory schemes in the states. It has also resulted in a steadily increasing volume of authorized noncriminal justice use. Findings of a recent national survey demonstrate that the state criminal record repositories are now handling about 2,000,000 noncriminal justice access requests a year.<sup>33</sup> In several states, including California, Minnesota, Pennsylvania and South Carolina, noncriminal justice traffic is greater than total criminal justice use of the criminal record systems, and, in several other states, noncriminal justice use is 40 percent or more of total system use. In many of these states, every session of the legislature in recent years has resulted in new statutory authority for noncriminal justice agencies and groups to obtain criminal record checks for such purposes as public and private employment, occupational licensing, and the issuance of various permits, certifications and clearances. As a result, it is probably safe to say that, in most states, present laws and policies on noncriminal justice access and use consist of a patchwork of statutory and regulatory provisions resulting from independent lobbying efforts by particular groups rather than from a comprehensive review of the issues and development of a consistent, balanced, statewide policy. It is literally true that no two state statutes on noncriminal justice access are identical. The following analysis of state statutory provisions will confirm these observations.

State Statutory Provisions

State statutes governing dissemination of criminal history records for noncriminal justice purposes are so varied as to defy classification. A few states, including Michigan, Mississippi and New Jersey, have no statutory provisions setting statewide policies on noncriminal justice access; in these states, the DOJ regulations control access and use. In a few other states, including South Carolina and Maryland, the statute does nothing more than delegate to designated officials the authority to issue rules and regulations on noncriminal justice dissemination. In states that do have laws dealing with the subject, the statutory approaches vary from those of Florida and Wisconsin, which are "open record" states where anyone can obtain access to criminal history records for any purpose, to that of Tennessee, which prohibits noncriminal justice access and use altogether and makes it a criminal offense to release criminal history records for such purposes. The other states fall somewhere in between, with statutory approaches that differ greatly as to what types of noncriminal justice agencies may have access to particular types of records for particular purposes.

There are, however, some patterns and similarities, due to the influence of the DOJ regulations. As pointed out earlier, the regulations do not place any restrictions on the dissemination of conviction records or open arrest records (arrest records with no recorded disposition) less than one year old. Nonconviction records (favorable dispositions, including decisions not to refer or prosecute charges and indefinite postponements, and open arrest records over a year old and not actively pending) may be disseminated for any purpose authorized by statute, ordinance, executive order or court ruling. Most of the states have followed this approach of treating conviction records differently from nonconviction records. Commonly, the states place few or no restrictions on the dissemination of conviction records and a number of states also do not restrict the dissemination of open arrest records less than a year old. Nonconviction records are restricted to a greater degree and in many states may not be disseminated at all for noncriminal justice purposes or may be disseminated only for particular purposes under specified circumstances.

Another similarity among many states is that the statutory provisions do not specifically identify particular noncriminal justice agencies or organizations that may obtain criminal history records. Instead, they define classes or types of agencies or organizations that may obtain certain types of records for certain designated purposes. Out-of-state agencies or federal agencies may be included in addition to in-state agencies and private agencies as well as governmental agencies may be included. The statutes may define permitted purposes in specific terms or more general terms. For example, some states authorize the use of criminal history records for any occupational licensing or employment purpose, while others authorize such use only for screening applicants for high risk occupations, such as those involving the public safety, supervision of children, or custody of cash or valuable property or information.<sup>34</sup>

Many of the laws also require that certain agencies or organizations must have separate legal authority to obtain criminal records or that the need for the record must be approved by a designated board, council or official. The statutory provisions that require separate legal authority for certain types of agencies vary considerably from state to state. The requirement may simply provide that the requestor must be "authorized by law" or must have "legal authority" or that the records must be necessary for a "lawful purpose."<sup>35</sup> Such provisions are interpreted in some states as authorizing the dissemination of criminal records for employment and occupational licensing purposes where the law merely requires the employing or licensing agency to screen out applicants who are not of "good moral character." Other state statutes, however, authorize the release of records for noncriminal justice purposes only if the requesting agency is "expressly" authorized by statute to obtain criminal records for use in the course of official duties.<sup>36</sup> This is a much stricter standard. Still stricter provisions authorize the release of criminal records only pursuant to statutory provisions that expressly refer to criminal conduct or to criminal records and contain requirements, exclusions or limitations based upon such conduct or records.<sup>37</sup>

Where prior approval by a council, board or designated official is required for the release of criminal records for noncriminal justice purposes, the designated standard for approval varies among the states. For example, criminal record laws in New Hampshire and South Dakota delegate general discretion to the director of the criminal record repository to determine who may have access, while Massachusetts law provides that the Security and Privacy Council or the Criminal History Systems Board, or both, must find that the public interest in releasing criminal records to particular noncriminal justice requesters outweighs the security and privacy interests of the record subject.

Several states, including Iowa, New Mexico, Ohio and South Dakota, require that the record subject must consent in writing to any release of his criminal history record for noncriminal justice purposes.

State Dissemination Policies

As will be evident from the discussion above, in most states the criminal history record laws provide only the framework for the state's policies on dissemination. Specific legal authority for particular agencies or organizations to obtain criminal records may be set out in separate statutory provisions, executive orders or even local ordinances. In addition, the actual policies and practices of particular states may be set out in regulations or may be based upon written or unwritten policies. These policies and practices are commonly more restrictive than the criminal record laws require them to be. That is, usually due to lack of staff and facilities, most state repositories do not provide records to all of the noncriminal justice agencies and organizations that are qualified under their laws. In addition, many states set out administrative requirements that may not be set out in their laws. For example, twelve states require that the subject's fingerprints be submitted with all requests for noncriminal justice access and that records may be released only upon positive verification, by fingerprint comparison, that the record released relates to the subject of the request.<sup>38</sup> Twenty-three states charge fees ranging from $3.00 to $14.50 for processing noncriminal justice record searches.<sup>39</sup>

Interstate Dissemination

Until the past few years, the great disparity among state dissemination laws was not perceived as a serious obstacle to the interstate dissemination of criminal records for noncriminal justice purposes, such as employment and occupational licensing. This was due primarily to the fact that there was no effective system linking the state repositories together in such a way as to permit the exchange of records from state to state for noncriminal justice purposes. National criminal record checks for noncriminal justice purposes have been feasible in the past only through use of the criminal files maintained in the FBI's Identification Division, which contain arrest and disposition data submitted by criminal justice agencies throughout the country. As of July 31, 1984, these files contained over 83 million criminal arrest fingerprint records on some 22 million individuals.

In fiscal 1983, the Identification Division processed approximately 3 million noncriminal justice applications for criminal record searches. Most of these were received from federal agencies for such purposes as civilian employment, security clearances, military recruitment, alien registration, visas and similar official purposes. However, this total also included approximately 260,000 criminal record checks performed for state and local governmental employment and licensing agencies with approved legal authority to request such searches, and 387,000 record checks for employment in federally chartered or insured banks and designated segments of the securities and commodities industries.

Although the criminal files of the Identification Division are made up primarily of arrest and disposition data submitted by state and local criminal justice agencies, these records are disseminated by the FBI pursuant to a standard established by federal law. Under this standard, federal agencies receive the entire record on subject individuals, including favorable dispositions and open arrest records without regard to the age of the record. Responses provided to banks, securities firms and state employment and licensing agencies include the entire record with the exception of open arrests over a year old and not still actively pending. Thus, it is possible for federal and state noncriminal justice agencies to obtain records from the FBI for purposes for which they could not obtain the records directly from the states where the records originated.

This system of duplicate state and federal files is changing because of concern for the disparity among state dissemination laws and the expense of maintaining and updating records at both the state and federal levels. A system is emerging that replaces the "national repository" approach to implementing a system for the interstate exchange of criminal records in favor of an approach utilizing a national index to link together the state repositories. This is essentially the system concept now being tested, known as the Interstate Identification Index (usually referred to as "III" or "Triple I"). The concept contemplates that, when the system is fully operational nationwide, the Triple I index maintained at the national level will contain only personal identification data on individuals whose criminal records are maintained in state criminal record repositories (state offenders) and in the criminal files of the FBI (federal offenders). The index will serve as a "pointer" to refer inquiring criminal justice agencies to the state or federal files where complete criminal history records on inquired-upon individuals are maintained. The records will be exchanged directly between the states and between state and federal criminal justice agencies by means of telecommunications lines linking federal, state and local criminal justice agencies throughout the country. Dissemination and use of the records obtained from state repositories will be governed by the laws and policies of the individual states, rather than by the uniform dissemination policy now utilized by the FBI.

It should be apparent that the disparity and restrictiveness of state dissemination laws will present serious obstacles to implementation of this type of interstate system. First, programming the index to screen noncriminal justice requests on the basis of the wide variety of existing state laws and policies would be difficult and the inquiry procedures would be complex. Second, the records that would be available to noncriminal justice agencies under this approach would be substantially less than are now available to them from the FBI's files. As pointed out earlier, the laws of a majority of the states are considerably more restrictive than the FBI standard. Some states will provide no records to federal agencies or to out-of-state agencies and others will provide only convictions (sometimes only certain convictions) and perhaps open arrest records that are less than a year old. It seems likely that this level of service would be viewed by these agencies (and by other policymakers) as insufficient to satisfy their needs.

Conclusion

The absence of federal legislation or regulations establishing a uniform nationwide dissemination policy for state criminal record systems has permitted the states to develop and implement their own approaches to the release of criminal records for noncriminal justice purposes. This has had the laudable effect of leaving the states free to establish their own privacy and confidentiality laws and policies to strike a proper balance between the rights of record subjects and the public interest. However, this has also resulted in the evolution of widely varying state approaches, and in laws and policies in many states that are more restrictive than the federal standard that governs noncriminal justice use of the FBI's files of state-contributed criminal history records. These factors are emerging as serious obstacles to the implementation of an "index-pointer" system for the interstate exchange of criminal records; such as the Triple I system now being tested. The success of a national program for the interstate exchange of criminal history records for noncriminal justice purposes may depend upon the willingness of many of the states to loosen existing restrictions in their laws and policies in order to provide an acceptable level of service to federal agencies and other noncriminal justice agencies that are now authorized to obtain records from the FBI.

Section 2

CLASSIFICATION CATEGORIES

Following are definitions of the categories into which state laws and regulations have been classified for both the individual and summary state tables.

1. *State Regulatory Authority.

A grant of power to a state agency to promulgate statewide security and privacy regulations for criminal justice information systems.

2. *Privacy and Security Council.

A state board, committee, commission, or council whose primary statutory function is monitoring, evaluating, or supervising the confidentiality and security of criminal justice information.

3. *Regulation of Dissemination.

Restrictions on dissemination of criminal history information.

4. *Right to Inspect.

The right of an individual to examine his criminal history record.

5. *Right to Challenge.

The right to an administrative proceeding in which an individual may contest the accuracy or completeness of his criminal history record.

6. *Judicial Review of Challenged Information.

The right of an individual to appeal an adverse agency decision concerning challenged information to a state court.

7. *Purging: Non-Conviction Information.

The destruction or return to the individual of criminal justice information where no conviction has resulted from the event triggering the collection of the information.

8. *Purging: Conviction Information.

The destruction or return to an individual of criminal history information indicating a conviction.

9. *Sealing: Non-Conviction Information.

The removal of criminal history information from active files where no conviction has resulted from the event triggering the collection of the information.

10. *Sealing: Conviction Information.

The removal from active files of individual criminal history information indicating a conviction.

11. *Removal of Disqualifications.

The restoration of rights and privileges such as public employment to persons who have had criminal history records purged or sealed.

12. *Right to State Non-Existence of a Record.

The right to indicate in response to public or private inquiries the absence of criminal history in cases of arrest not leading to conviction or where an arrest or conviction record has been purged.

13. *Research Access.

The provision for and regulation of access to criminal justice information by outside researchers.

14. *Accuracy and Completeness.

A requirement that agencies institute procedures to insure reasonably complete and accurate criminal history information, including the setting of deadlines for the reporting of prosecutorial and court dispositions.

15. *Dedication.

The requirement that computer configurations be assigned exclusively to the criminal justice function.

16. *Civil Remedies.

Statutory actions for damages or other relief resulting from violations of privacy and security laws.

17. *Criminal Penalties.

Criminal sanctions for violations of privacy and security laws.

18. *Public Records.

Requirements that official records maintained by public officials be open to the public.

19. *Separation of Files.

Requirements that criminal history information be stored separate from investigative and intelligence information.

20. *Regulation of Intelligence Collection.

Restrictions on the kind of intelligence information which may be collected and retained and/or prohibition on its storage in computerized systems.

SUMMARY TABLES: CLASSIFICATION CATEGORIES

A. Survey Comparison of Changes in State Statutes/Regulation by Classification Category

The table on the following page graphically depicts comparative results of legislative survey findings for the years 1974, 1978, 1979, 1981, 1984 and 1987. The reader should note, however, that each survey year is included in the results of the succeeding survey, with the sum of the legislative activity reflected in the current survey year.

The table shows that the leveling trend detected in the 1984 survey has continued. Surveys through 1981 showed significant increases in the number of states enacting new laws or regulations in most categories. In recent years, however, state legislative activity dealing with criminal records has slowed. New or significantly amended provisions have been enacted by only a few states in a few categories. This probably reflects two developments. First, most of the states have now settled on the basic approach they favor concerning the regulation of the maintenance and use of criminal records, and recent legislation has dealt with refinements in existing laws rather than enactment of new initiatives. Second, the basic principles of security and privacy reflected in the federal regulations have become widely recognized and understood by criminal justice officials, and procedures to prevent abuses have been established and enforced. As a result, security and privacy issues are not as prevalent as they were in the late 1960's and early 1970's when the states were beginning to wrestle with the problem of compliance with the regulations.

As a result, the survey comparison table shows that, in many categories, the numbers for 1987 are the same as those for 1984. In most of the others, the numbers reflect new enactments by only one or two states.

B. Summary of State Statutes/Regulations by Classification Category

The tables on the following pages, entitled "Summary of State Statutes/Regulations by Classification Category," contain detailed matrixes summarizing state statutes and regulations through September 1987. For easy reference, the table for each classification category has been organized alphabetically by state, and the matrix references are keyed to section numbers of the state codes.

These summary tables, and all other tables in this compendium, reflect the laws of 53 jurisdictions: the 50 states and the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands. The citations are to official compilations of state laws and regulations. Only title and section numbers are set out in these summary tables. For the full titles of the compilations to which the citations refer, reference should be made to the individual state tables in Section 4.

SUMMARY TABLES: STATUTES AND REGULATIONS

This section of the Compendium sets forth a listing of the titles of the official compilations of state laws and regulations, the full titles for each classification category, and the citations indicating section numbers of the state codes.

It is the purpose of this collection to make available to the researcher the variety of approaches and alternatives taken by the states in regard to their criminal history information practices. However, please note that this effort is current through September 1987, and thus further review of a particular state's legislation may be appropriate to include more recent enactments.

The reader is reminded that the full text of the state laws cited herein is available free in microfiche from the National Criminal Justice Reference Service. A full, hard-copy library of the statutes is available from SEARCH Group, Inc.

A Complete Picture of Crime in the United States

Report to the Nation on Crime and Justice on Slides!

Now you can take data from Report to the Nation on the road. The Bureau of Justice Statistics (BJS) has converted the book's charts, maps, and graphs to slides. The slides are designed for showing at public and community forums, conferences, and in classrooms and training academies.

More than 125 slides present a statistical portrait of crime and justice in the United States. Each slide is coded for ready reference to the full text of the second and most current edition of the Report, so a full presentation can be easily created.

Slide topics highlight criminal justice issues of the 1980s—How much crime is there? Who does it strike? When? Where? Who is the typical offender? What happens to convicted criminals? What are the costs of justice? Who pays?

The slides span the gap between researchers and the people who need answers about crime.

☐ YES! Send me the slide presentation of the Report to the Nation on Crime and Justice—a comprehensive overview of crime and the criminal justice system.

Crime and Older Americans

Information Package

- Are older Americans more likely to be victims of crime than younger age groups?
- Are the elderly being arrested for certain crimes more frequently than in the past?
- Are offenders in crimes against the elderly more likely to be strangers or nonstrangers compared to other age groups?

A new information package available from the Justice Statistics Clearinghouse answers these and other questions about crime and the elderly. Drawing from national sources for crime statistics—including the BJS National Crime Survey, the FBI Uniform Crime Reports, and the BJS National Corrections Reporting Program—the 34-page package discusses the types of crimes in which older Americans are most likely to be victims and offenders, and the types of crime prevention they use.

As the elderly population has grown, so has concern about the effects of crime on this age group.

Population statistics indicate that older Americans are fast becoming a large segment of the total U.S. population. In 1985, Americans 60 years and older totaled 39.5 million—a 21-percent increase over the past 10 years.

This package also includes the names and addresses of associations and organizations that are sources of information about crime and older Americans and a list of further readings.

Crime and Older Americans costs only $10.00.

Please send me _____ copies of the Information Package on Crime and Older Americans (NCJ 104569) at $10.00 each.

One free phone call can give you access to a growing data base on drugs & crime

The new Data Center & Clearinghouse for Drugs & Crime is managed by the Bureau of Justice Statistics. To serve you, the center will —

- Respond to your requests for drugs and crime data.
- Let you know about new drugs and crime data reports.
- Send you reports on drugs and crime.
- Conduct special bibliographic searches for you on specific drugs and crime topics.
- Refer you to data on epidemiology, prevention, and treatment of substance abuse at the National Clearinghouse for Alcohol and Drug Information of the Alcohol, Drug Abuse, and Mental Health Administration.
- Publish special reports on subjects such as assets forfeiture and seizure, economic costs of drug-related crime, drugs and violence, drug laws of the 50 States, drug abuse and corrections, and innovative law enforcement reactions to drugs and crime.
- Prepare a comprehensive, concise report that will bring together a rich array of data to trace and quantify the full flow of illicit drugs from cultivation to consequences.
