CHAPTER I: INTRODUCTION

Since 1961 the State of California has reimbursed counties for expensive homicide trials. Originally, the reimbursement formula resembled that used for automobile insurance. After a trial exceeded a specified cost -- i.e. a deductible -- the State paid all subsequent costs. Legislation authored by Assemblyman Condit (AB 1813) changed the formula so that it now resembles that used for major medical insurance. The so-called Condit formula lowers the deductible by 50 percent but has the State paying less than 100 percent of all subsequent costs. For small counties, that is those with less than 300,000 residents at the time of the 1980 census, the State share equals 90 percent, which implies a ten percent coinsurance rate. Large counties also saw their deductible lowered, however, for them the State pays only 80 percent of costs.

State aid becomes available as soon as a trial's cost exceeds 0.625 percent of one percent of the assessed value of property within the county, which equals the property tax revenue received by all governmental entities in the county. (Under the Condit formula, each trial is treated as a separate, independent event, so that the deductible must be made for each trial before the county can be reimbursed.) While the percentage cutoff does not vary among counties, the use of property tax as a base effectively limits aid to small counties. Since 1981 only Del Norte, Lassen, Lake, Mendocino, Sierra, Glenn, Napa, San Benito, Sutter and Kings counties have had homicide trials that qualified for reimbursement.

Under the Condit formula the following costs are eligible for reimbursement: All costs related to homicide trial, except normal salaries and expenses, incurred by the county including investigations, prosecutions, defense, expert witnesses, exhibits, laboratory work, and other related expenses, e.g. travel, transportation and out of pocket expenses. Trial costs include all pretrials, hearings and post-conviction proceedings.

More recent legislation by Assemblyman N. Waters (AB 1988, Chapter 32, Statutes of 1986) further refined the formula. (Both this bill and that by Assemblyman Condit are reproduced in Appendix A.) That legislation sought to provide further fiscal relief to counties whose 1980 population did not exceed 150,000. It allows those counties to aggregate all murder trial costs for the purpose of meeting the deductible. It further provides that such counties can receive advanced funding for murder trial costs.

These changes had several purposes. Lowering the deductible shifts the cost burden from counties to the State. Causing counties to pay ten percent of all subsequent costs represents incentive to conserve financial resources.

PURPOSE AND FINDINGS OF THE REPORT

Both AB 1813 and AB 1988 directed the Governor's Office of Planning and Research to assess how the new formulas affect trial costs and efficiency. Specifically, both bills contained the following language:

The Legislature recognizes that the conduct of trials for persons accused of homicide should not be hampered or delayed because of a lack of funds available to the counties for that purpose. While this section [Section 3 of AB 1988, N. Waters] is intended to provide an equitable basis for determining the allocation to the State of the costs of homicide trials in any particular county, the rising costs of those trials necessitate an objective study to assure reasonable financial restraints and incentives for cost effectiveness that do not place an unreasonable burden on the treasury of the smaller counties.

This report presents the findings and recommendations. Briefly, it concludes that current law does not promote equitable cost sharing and provides, at best, only limited incentives for cost conservation. The cost sharing is not equitable, because the reimbursement formula uses countywide property tax to trigger reimbursement. Since revenue actually available to counties can differ substantially from countywide property taxes, seemingly similar counties face noticeably different cost shares.

Incentives for cost conservation have limited effect, because the law and legal system govern the conduct of major murder trials. Attorneys and judges have little incentive to conserve costs when faced with strong legal proscriptions, while the paying party -- the county -- has little involvement in the actual trial conduct.

Based on those conclusions, we recommend that reimbursements and cost sharing be based on a measure of income truly available to Counties with which to pay their bills: For example, total receipts from sales, property and bed taxes. If that change were made the current deductible and coinsurance rates should be continued.

Cost efficiency would be improved by having the State contract with one or more firms to defend accused parties. Such contracts would promote specialization and combine the accountability and responsibility for trial conduct, thereby increasing efficiency without endangering the rights of defendants.

ORGANIZATION OF THE REPORT

The next section describes the methodology we used in the conduct of this study and reviews the laws. The last section presents our conclusions and recommendations.

CHAPTER II: METHODOLOGY

Our methodological choices were influenced by the nature of the information sought. In the mandate for this study, the issues that the Legislature was more concerned about are more subjective and qualitative than objective and quantitative. Consider, for example, the question of whether the financial restraints are reasonable or unreasonable. Or consider the issue of whether cost sharing is or is not equitable.

The complex legal and social structures affecting and governing the conduct of trials also conditioned our methodological choices. It is debatable whether sufficient detailed data could be gathered that would support valid statistical inferences on murder trial costs, what affects them and how those relationships might vary as a consequence of changing reimbursement formulas.

Nonetheless, if many trials had received State aid, we might have pursued detailed statistical analyses, seeking to isolate the financial effect of differing coinsurance rates. However, the State reimbursed counties for fewer than two dozen trials the past five years. Moreover, all of those trials involved crimes that were committed in rural California, thereby removing an important source of variation.

Therefore, we relied heavily on face to face interviews with the principals in affected murder trials to obtain information. We judged that their knowledge, understanding and insight would provide adequate information with which to complete this study.

This chapter details those methodological choices.

WHO WAS INTERVIEWED?

The first task undertaken was to identify which murder trials had received State funding under Section 11019.5 of the California Government Code, which lays out the eligibility criteria. The California State Controller's Office provided a list of counties who have been reimbursed for the costs of extraordinarily expensive murder trials as well as the name of the defendant. Table II.1 reproduces that list.

Because all the counties on the list save one are very small -- 1980 population less than 150,000 -- we have focused our research on those counties.

Using the list from Table II.1, the Presiding Judge of the Superior Court in each county was contacted to determine the name of the trial judge, the assigned counsel and the District Attorney. We also contacted the County Administrative Officer in each affected county, who would be directly responsible for paying the county's share of trial costs. Interviews were then set up with the relevant parties. (Appendix B lists all those who were interviewed.)

WHAT WAS ASKED?

Prior to the actual conduct of the interviews, the following lines of inquiry were thought to be the most productive.

1. Given the rigorous legal environment circumscribing the conduct of murder trials, can costs affect their conduct?

A critical issue in the conduct of a capital case -- i.e. one where the death penalty is sought -- is to avoid a reversible error. Since the reimposition of the death penalty, the courts have been expanding the definition and types of reversible errors. To minimize that probability, attorneys and judges would choose to err on the side of caution, regardless of the expense involved. If so, costs could tend to be a secondary consideration.

On the other hand, costs could adversely affect the conduct of murder trials. For a small county, their share of the cost may be so burdensome as to encourage "downsizing" of the complaint by the district attorney. [1]

2. Given that the current law lowers the costs to counties of murder trials is there an incentive to "overconsume" murder trials?

Under the current reimbursement formula the price of conducting a murder trial is lower than it was before. Lower cost could encourage district attorneys to "oversize" cases or defense attorneys to engage more expensive expert witnesses.

3. Given the comparative rarity of rural murder trials is there room for improved efficiency?

Is it efficient for the State to pay for new, different attorneys for each murder trial? Murder

[1] This latter concern is more than theoretical. In the recent Tehama County sex slave trial, Tehama County wanted to accept a ten year plea rather than incur the costs of a change of venue. (Venue was changed and a 104 year sentence given 1 DCA A033479.) In a pending case in El Dorado County, People vs. Darlene Brazil, the trial court had ordered the District Attorney not to confer with court appointed psychiatrists without the defence attorneys being present, in part at least to reduce costs.

trials require special expertise, which in the rural areas may have to be constantly reacquired. If so, trial conduct might be inefficient, in that the attorneys lack complete familiarity.

4. Despite greater State contributions to trial costs, did such trials still strain local budgets?

Even though counties qualify for State assistance after spending as little as $9,000, is there still a burden because of limited unencumbered resources with which to pay the bills?

5. Does the presense of "987.9" money for defense investigation and other costs affect the conduct and hence county share of costs? [2]

The State pays 100 percent of defense noncounsel costs, whereas the county pays all prosecution costs that are not extranormal. Does the difference in resources favor the defense and if so is that advantage unfair?

WHAT OTHER SOURCES PROVIDED INFORMATION?

We also sought objective data on expenditures and hourly rates for the various trials. That information came primarily from the State Controller's Office, which is responsible for reimbursing counties for eligible costs. Eligible costs include expenditures for such items as expert witnesses, defense attorneys' salary and expenses, sheriffs' overtime, and court costs -- primarily for court reporters and daily transcripts.

The State Controller's Office also provided detailed data on county financial resources and expenditures. Those data when compared with trial cost data can be used to assess whether the current formula provided for equitable cost sharing between counties and the State.

The next chapter presents what we found.

[2] Section 987.9 of the California Penal Code provides complete State funding for all noncounsel defense costs for indigent defendants in capital cases. Requests for funds are heard in camera by a superior court judge who is not the trial judge. These funds are available to all counties regardless of size or financial resources.

CHAPTER III: CONCLUSIONS

In authorizing this study, the Legislature was seeking answers to two questions: First, does the current formula result in equitable cost sharing between the State and its counties? Second, does the current formula provide an adequate incentive to contain costs? Information presented in this Chapter strongly suggests: 1) that the current formula places about twice the burden on counties' unencumbered resources available for paying the costs of major murder trials than the current law would suggest and; 2) that the cost conserving measures are ineffective. Additionally, we found indications that efficiency in the conduct of rural murder trials can be increased.

This Chapter details our findings and recommends corrective actions.

IS COST SHARING EQUITABLE?

Equity in cost sharing has two components. First, are counties with equal resources treated equally? Second, is the cost split between the county and the State equitable?

The law states that when a county has spent 0.625 percent of one percent of its assessed value, the State should begin to pick up a major portion of the cost of major murder trials. The justification for using a countywide measure of property tax revenue would presumably be: Murder is a heinous crime against all society, therefore the cost of timely fair trials should be borne by all. The property tax is among the broadest based taxes, so it is an appropriate measure of ability to pay.

Unfortunately, the formula does not result in equitable cost sharing between seemingly comparable counties. This inequity flows from counties not receiving all of the property tax collected within their borders. In fact, the smaller counties -- those whose population is less than 150,000 -- receive about one third of total collections, with the remaining two thirds going to schools, cities, and special districts (See Table III.1). [3]

[3] A county's share of the property tax is not necessarily a better measure of the county's unencumbered resources. In 1978, in response to Article XIII of the California Constitution, counties negotiated the split in property tax revenues with their cities, schools and special districts. Those splits ranging from 85/15 to 20/80 county/everybody else. Some variation is to be expected because other taxes, i.e. sales and bed taxes were also negotiated at the same time.

The table compares the total property tax available within a county with actual county receipts. The table arrays counties in ascending order of total available. Actual receipts show substantial variation for similar counties. Compare for example San Benito, Amador and Inyo counties. Total available taxes are close, but receipts differ by almost $2,000,000. Thus, similar cost trials would appear to place substantially different burdens on different counties.

SOURCE: Derived from calculations applied to California Board of Equalization figures for total assessed value and from data supplied by California State Controller's Office.

The degree to which counties can control their expenditures also makes using a fraction of countywide property tax as a way to trigger State aid problematic. Most county expenditures are for programs, such as welfare, health care for the poor and the justice system, whose cost cannot be effectively controlled by the county. Consequently, the amount of property tax revenue available or received does not truly measure how much income is available to pay for a major murder trial.

In practical terms, basing the deductible on property tax results in a much greater burden on actual resources than is at first apparent. Table III.2 shows how the deductible compares to one measure of resources actually available. That measure equals the sum of county property, sales and other tax receipts for the fiscal year 1985/86. When the deductible, i.e. 0.625 percent of total property tax revenue available, as defined by current law is compared to that measure, we see that counties need to spend about one and a half percent of their discretionary income before receiving State aid. That fraction is more than double the rate in current law.

Assuming the table accurately measures available income, then the "true" copayment rate is more than double the ten percent proscribed by law. For California's small counties, discretionary income, as defined here, averages 40.3 percent of countywide property tax. Thus a ten percent levy on that tax translates into a levy of almost 25 percent on the resources available to a county to pay for the conduct of murder trials.

ARE THE COST CONTAINMENT INCENTIVES EFFECTIVE?

Current law forces counties to pay ten percent of all reimbursable costs above the minimum in order to encourage cost conservation. However, the copayment has virtually no effect on cost containment. The cost of a murder trial, and especially the cost of a capital case, is governed primarily by the legal environment and theories governing how that environment is viewed.

All death penalty convictions are automatically appealed to assure that the defendants rights were not violated. Therefore, all parties to the case go to great lengths to ensure and protect the accused rights. Furthermore, since the cost of a second trial considerably exceeds the cost of, say, another motion, any activity that has legal merit is pursued. The county has little or no say in what issues have legal merit, and therefore little impact on decisions that affect costs.

Another factor lessens the counties' ability to contain trial costs. In 1977, the State enacted Section 987.9 of the California Penal Code which provides 100 percent reimbursement for all costs of preparing the defense except for legal counsel. Approval of 987.9 money comes from a superior court judge who is not the trial judge. Further, both the request and approval are done in camera with only the "987.9" judge and defense counsel present. Thus, a county cannot apply economic considerations to a primary determinant of trial costs.

For the more rural areas, a third factor serves to drive up the cost of murder trials: The local legal community's lack of experience. Many counties have had few murder trials and many no capital cases. Only 15 counties have been reimbursed for the costs of a major murder trial. Even fewer counties have been reimbursed for several trials. The consequent lack of intimate familiarity with current law and legal theory will increase both prosecution and defense costs.

Both counsels will have to learn or relearn an area of the law that has undergone and is undergoing considerable change. They will bill for their hours spent on legal research. Given the importance of jury selection, inexperienced counsels may be more likely to seek professional help in that process, which can easily cost $25,000. The consequence for the State is that it repeatedly pays for the acquisition of knowledge as well as its use.

That lack of experience can also affect expenditure of 987.9 money. Both judges and defense counsel have little knowledge with which to decide what constitutes a reasonable expenditure for given activities. Evidence of that was found in numerous complaints about "outrageous" defense requests and penurious judicial attitudes.

Do those facts imply both that counties have little practical control over costs and that society, in general and the counties in particular are spending more than needed to conduct murder trials in small counties? Those interviewed felt that the answer was yes with the important qualifier that the degree of overconsumption was readily quantifiable. It is important to note that even substantial overconsumption does not imply major losses. Since 1981 State reimbursements total less than $8,000,000. Thus even if inefficiency and overconsumption inflated the bill by a quarter, potential savings from their elimination would be less than $2,000,000 over a multiyear period. [4]

RECOMMENDATIONS:

We recommend that current law be changed to better reflect the fiscal strength of small counties. One way to accomplish that would be to revise the law so that some measure of the resources actually available to the county would be used calculate both the deductible and copayment. The continued use of a fraction of countywide property tax as a trigger for reimbursement results in inequitable cost sharing between the counties and the State and it does not treat counties with equal resources equally. With those changes, the amended law should continue to use the current fractions for calculating the deductible and copayments.

[4] Program costs to date probably underestimate future costs. According to the State Controller's Office, costs for fiscal 1986/87 will total about $2.5 million. Further, the change in the California State Supreme Court may increase the willingness of prosecutors to seek the death penalty.

The consequence of the recommended changes would be to halve the deductible and the copayment, while establishing incentives for cost containment. Counties would receive more assistance but would not receive a "blank check" with which to pay for murder trials.

Further changes are feasible that would provide for more efficient and effective trial conduct. The State could contract with law firms or public defenders to provide defense services in capital cases. When counties were confronted with the need to provide those services they could hire them from the State rather than from local assigned counsel.

Because the winning firm(s) would both control and "pay" for the conduct of murder trials, they would have an incentive to keep costs as low as possible, consistent with providing an adequate defense. Moreover, assuming competitive bidding the State would purchase defense services at the lowest cost, thereby freeing general fund monies for other uses.

Further, since the winning firm would presumably specialize in murder trial defense especially for capital cases, they would be current as to which motions to file and what legal theories were governing the general conduct of such trials. (Such specialization might have the felicitous side effect of reducing the incidence of reversible errors.)

Careful contract design could also forestall factors which might otherwise increase costs. Increased travel, necessitated by a central office, could be reduced by locating the office near users. The travel costs from an office centrally located in Northern California should be less than from one in San Francisco or Los Angeles. A fixed price contract, i.e. one paid by the case rather than by the hour, would reduce the incentive for firms to pad the number of hours worked and encourage them to seek least cost providers of investigators, expert witnesses, psychological profiles etc.[5]

To sum up, the current law does encourage cost effectiveness, but could be improved. It also encourages somewhat excessive spending for the conduct of murder trials. Finally, the current law places excessive and uneven cost burdens on counties.

[5]Napa County currently contracts for public defender services for murder trials on a fixed price per trial basis.

APPENDIX A

Assembly Bill No. 1813

CHAPTER 1469

An act to amend and repeal Section 15202 of the Government Code, relating to trials.

[Approved by Governor September 25, 1984. Filed with Secretary of State September 26, 1984.]

LEGISLATIVE COUNSEL'S DIGEST

AB 1813, Condit. Homicide trials.

Under existing law, counties may receive reimbursements in excess of a specified amount for costs of homicide trials.

This bill would authorize additional reimbursement, as specified, with the amount depending upon whether or not the county has a specified population.

This bill would direct the Office of Planning and Research to undertake a study, in cooperation with, among others, the Legislative Analyst and the defense bar, concerning this provision for reimbursement, and to report to the Governor and the Legislature no later than July 1, 1987.

This bill would be repealed on January 1, 1989, unless a later statute, enacted before that date, deletes or extends that date.

The people of the State of California do enact as follows:

SECTION 1. Section 15202 of the Government Code is amended to read:

15202. (a) A county with a population of 300,000 or less, at the time of the 1980 decennial census, which is responsible for the cost of a trial or trials or any hearing of a person for the offense of homicide may apply to the Controller for reimbursement of 90 percent of the costs incurred by the county for each such trial or hearing, without regard to fiscal year, in excess of the amount of money derived by the county from a tax of 0.00625 of 1 percent of the full value of property assessed for purposes of taxation within the county.

(b) A county with a population exceeding 300,000 at the time of the 1980 decennial census which is responsible for the cost of a trial or trials or any hearing of a person for the offense of homicide may apply to the Controller for reimbursement of 80 percent of the costs incurred by the county in excess of the amount of money derived by the county from a tax of 0.00625 of 1 percent, and not in excess of the amount of money derived from a tax of 0.0125 of 1 percent, and for reimbursement of 100 percent of the costs incurred in excess of the amount of money derived from a tax of 0.0125 percent, of the full value of property assessed for purposes of taxation within the county.

(c) The Controller shall not reimburse any county for costs that exceed the standards for travel and per diem expenses set forth in Sections 700 to 715, and 718, of Title 2 of the California Administrative Code. The Controller may reimburse extraordinary costs in unusual cases if the county provides sufficient justification of the need for such expenditures.

(d) The Legislature recognizes that the conduct of trials for persons accused of homicide should not be hampered or delayed because of a lack of funds available to the counties for that purpose. While this section is intended to provide an equitable basis for determining the allocation to the state of the costs of homicide trials in any particular county, the rising costs of those trials necessitate an objective study to assure reasonable financial restraints and incentives for cost-effectiveness that do not place an unreasonable burden on the treasury of the smaller counties.

In order to assist the Governor and the Legislature in making that determination, the Office of Planning and Research, in cooperation with the Legislative Analyst, state and local agencies, representatives of law enforcement and the defense bar, and other public officials, shall undertake a study of the effectiveness of this section with regard to those concerns, and, no later than July 1, 1987, shall submit a report to the Governor and to the Legislature with its findings and any recommendations for amendment of this section.

SEC. 2. Section 1 of this act applies to any case in which a final judgment was not entered prior to January 1, 1985. Section 1 shall remain in effect only until January 1, 1989, and as of that date is repealed, unless a later enacted statute, which is enacted before January 1, 1989, deletes or extends that date. If that date is not deleted or extended, then, on and after January 1, 1989, pursuant to Section 9611 of the Government Code, Section 15202 of the Government Code, as amended by Section 46 of Chapter 323 the Statutes of 1983, shall have the same force and effect as if this temporary provision had not been enacted.

CHAPTER 32

An act to amend Sections 11019.5 and 15202 of the Government Code, to amend Section 13516 of the Penal Code, and to amend Section 2 of Chapter 1469 of the Statutes of 1984, relating to crime, making an appropriation therefor, and declaring the urgency thereof, to take effect immediately.

[Approved by Governor March 21, 1986. Filed with Secretary of State March 21, 1986.]

LEGISLATIVE COUNSEL'S DIGEST

AB 1988, N. Waters. Criminal trials and investigations.

(1) Under existing law and until January 1, 1989, counties with a population of 300,000 or less may receive reimbursement from the state, without regard to fiscal year, of 90% of the costs incurred by the county for each homicide trial or hearing. Reimbursements are made to a county for those costs incurred which exceed the amount of money derived by the county from a prescribed property tax.

This bill would allow a county with a population of 150,000 or less to obtain reimbursement under the above provision for the costs incurred in the conduct of only one homicide trial or hearing which is continued from a prior fiscal year without limiting the amount of that reimbursement to those costs which exceed the amount of money derived by the county from the prescribed property tax.

Secondly, this bill would revise the amount of reimbursement that a county with a population of 150,000 or less may receive from the state for the cost of 2 or more homicide trials or hearings within a fiscal year to 90% of those costs, in excess of the specified property tax derived, for the first trial, and 85% of the costs incurred for subsequent trials or hearings.

The bill would also set forth the allowable reimbursable costs for counties with a population of 150,000 or less.

This bill would shorten the operative date of the above provisions from January 1, 1989, to January 1, 1988.

The bill would also require the Controller to advance payment to a county for claims under this bill.

The bill would apply to extraordinary costs incurred in the investigation and prosecution of any homicide case if the costs were incurred on or after July 1, 1985.

(2) Existing law requires the Commission on Peace Officer Standards and Training to prepare guidelines establishing standard procedures which may be followed by police agencies in the investigation of sexual assault cases, and cases involving the sexual exploitation or sexual abuse of children, including, police response to, and treatment of, victims of these crimes.

This bill would express the Legislature's intent that this existing law is to encourage the establishment of investigation guidelines that take into consideration the sensitive nature of the sexual exploitation and sexual abuse of children with respect to both the accused and the alleged victim.

The bill would appropriate $250,000 to the Controller for expenditures in fiscal year 1985-86 in augmentation of a specified item of the Budget Act of 1985 for purposes of paying the claims set forth in the bill and would authorize a request for a deficiency appropriation for additional amounts.

(3) The bill would take effect immediately as an urgency statute. Appropriation: yes.

The people of the State of California do enact as follows:

SECTION 1. Section 11019.5 of the Government Code is amended to read:

11019.5. (a) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, but to the extent consistent with applicable federal law or regulation, any state department specified in subdivision (b), after receiving a request by a board of supervisors of an affected county which has a population of 150,000 or less as of January 1, 1983, and upon determining that advance payment is essential to the effective implementation of a particular program, and further to the extent that funds are available, and not more frequently than once each month, may advance to the county an amount not to exceed one-twelfth of the annual allocations, subventions, or reimbursements required for the delivery of services by a county.

(b) This section applies to the Department of Corrections, the Department of Health Services, and the State Department of Mental Health, and to claims presented to the Controller pursuant to subdivision (b) of Section 15202.

(c) The director of each department specified in subdivision (b) and the Controller shall promulgate regulations or guidelines and a plan to establish control procedures to define the scope of operational information required from a county in order to guarantee advance payments pursuant to this section. No county may receive an advance payment unless the county has complied with the provisions of the department's plan and regulations. Each department plan shall be approved by the Department of Finance prior to its implementation.

(d) Claim schedules for advance payments shall be presented to the appropriate department in the manner prescribed by the department. Payment of claims shall be made within 60 days after a claim is received by the department.

(e) Each department specified in subdivision (b) shall review periodically and adjust advances to actual expenditures for the claim period. Additionally, each department shall take into consideration the timing of the implementation of new programs in the computation of advances. The authority contained in this chapter shall not supersede or limit any other provision of law authorizing the state to conduct required audits of claims transactions.

(f) A county, upon determining that an advance payment is essential for the effective implementation of a particular program, and to the extent funds are available, and not more frequently than once each month, may advance to other affected local public agencies located within its jurisdiction (i.e., school districts, special districts, cities, etc.) an amount not to exceed one-twelfth of the annual allocations, reimbursements, or subventions required for the delivery of services pursuant to related state and federal laws.

SEC. 2. Section 15202 of the Government Code, as amended by Chapter 1469 of the Statutes of 1984, is amended to read:

15202. (a) A county with a population of 300,000 or less, at the time of the 1980 decennial census, which is responsible for the cost of a trial or trials or any hearing of a person for the offense of homicide may apply to the Controller for reimbursement of 90 percent of the costs incurred by the county for each such trial or hearing, without regard to fiscal year, in excess of the amount of money derived by the county from a tax of 0.00625 of 1 percent of the full value of property assessed for purposes of taxation within the county.

(b) (1) A county with a population of 150,000 or less, at the time of the 1980 decennial census, which is responsible for the cost of two or more trials or hearings within a fiscal year of a person or persons for the offense of homicide may apply to the Controller for reimbursement of 90 percent of the costs incurred in a fiscal year by the county for the conduct of the first trial within a fiscal year and 85 percent of the costs incurred in a fiscal year by the county for the conduct of any and all subsequent trials or hearings, in excess of the amount of money derived by the county from a tax of 0.00625 of 1 percent of the full value of property assessed for purposes of taxation within the county.

(2) A county with a population of 150,000 or less, at the time of the 1980 decennial census, which, within a fiscal year, is reimbursed for costs incurred by the county for the conduct of only one trial or hearing pursuant to subdivision (a) shall be reimbursed for that one trial or hearing in subsequent fiscal years for costs incurred in those subsequent fiscal years without again being required to expend county funds equal to 0.00625 of 1 percent of assessed valuation of property within the county so long as all reimbursements to the county under this paragraph are for only that one trial or hearing.

For purposes of this subdivision, in determining the costs of a homicide trial, trials, hearing, or hearings, the costs shall include, all pretrial, trial, and posttrial costs incurred in connection with the investigation, prosecution, and defense of a homicide case or cases within a fiscal year, including, but not limited to, the costs incurred by the district attorney, sheriff, public defender, and witnesses, which were reasonably required by the court and participants in the case or cases, and other extraordinary costs associated with the investigation in homicide cases.

(c) A county with a population exceeding 300,000 at the time of the 1980 decennial census which is responsible for the cost of a trial or trials or any hearing of a person for the offense of homicide may apply to the Controller for reimbursement of 80 percent of the costs incurred by the county in excess of the amount of money derived by the county from a tax of 0.00625 of 1 percent, and not in excess of the amount of money derived from a tax of 0.0125 of 1 percent, and for reimbursement of 100 percent of the costs incurred in excess of the amount of money derived from a tax of 0.0125 percent, of the full value of property assessed for purposes of taxation within the county.

(d) The Controller shall not reimburse any county for costs that exceed the standards for travel and per diem expenses set forth in Sections 700 to 715, and 718, of Title 2 of the California Administrative Code. The Controller may reimburse extraordinary costs in unusual cases if the county provides sufficient justification of the need for such expenditures.

(e) The Legislature recognizes that the conduct of trials for persons accused of homicide should not be hampered or delayed because of a lack of funds available to the counties for that purpose. While this section is intended to provide an equitable basis for determining the allocation to the state of the costs of homicide trials in any particular county, the rising costs of those trials necessitate an objective study to assure reasonable financial restraints and incentives for cost-effectiveness that do not place an unreasonable burden on the treasury of the smaller counties.

In order to assist the Governor and the Legislature in making that determination, the Office of Planning and Research, in cooperation with the Legislative Analyst, state and local agencies, representatives of law enforcement and the defense bar, and other public officials, shall undertake a study of the effectiveness of this section with regard to those concerns, and, no later than July 1, 1987, shall submit a report to the Governor and to the Legislature with its findings and any recommendations for amendment of this section.

SEC. 3. Section 13516 of the Penal Code is amended to read:

13516. (a) The commission shall prepare guidelines establishing standard procedures which may be followed by police agencies in the investigation of sexual assault cases, and cases involving the sexual exploitation or sexual abuse of children, including, police response to, and treatment of, victims of these crimes.

(b) The course of training leading to the basic certificate issued by the commission shall, on and after July 1, 1977, include adequate instruction in the procedures described in subdivision (a). No reimbursement shall be made to local agencies based on attendance on or after that date at any course which does not comply with the requirements of this subdivision.

(c) The commission shall prepare and implement a course for the training of specialists in the investigation of sexual assault cases, child sexual exploitation cases, and child sexual abuse cases. Officers assigned to investigation duties which include the handling of cases involving the sexual exploitation or sexual abuse of children, shall successfully complete that training within six months of the date the assignment was made.

(d) It is the intent of the Legislature in the enactment of this section to encourage the establishment of sex crime investigation units in police agencies throughout the state, which units shall include, but not be limited to, investigating crimes involving the sexual exploitation and sexual abuse of children.

(e) It is the further intent of the Legislature in the enactment of this section to encourage the establishment of investigation guidelines that take into consideration the sensitive nature of the sexual exploitation and sexual abuse of children with respect to both the accused and the alleged victim.

SEC. 4. Section 2 of Chapter 1469 of the Statutes of 1984 is amended to read:

Sec. 2. Section 1 of this act applies to any case in which a final judgment was not entered prior to January 1, 1985. Section 1 shall remain in effect only until January 1, 1988, and as of that date is repealed, unless a later enacted statute, which is enacted before January 1, 1988, deletes or extends that date. If that date is not deleted or extended, then, on and after January 1, 1988, pursuant to Section 9611 of the Government Code, Section 15202 of the Government Code, as amended by Section 46 of Chapter 323 the Statutes of 1983, shall have the same force and effect as if this temporary provision had not been enacted.

SEC. 5. With respect to the amendments set forth in Sections 2 and 4 of this act, the Legislature finds and declares the following:

(a) That Chapter 1469 of the Statutes of 1984 enacted provisions intended to accomplish each of the following objectives:

(1) Authorized, until January 1, 1989, a new procedure for additional state reimbursement for costs of homicide trials in counties with a population of 300,000 or less.

(2) Directed the Office of Planning and Research to undertake a study, in cooperation with specified public agencies, concerning this provision for reimbursement and to report to the Governor and the Legislature no later than July 1, 1987.

(b) That pending the study outcome there is an immediate need to provide further interim state assistance to small rural counties, with a population of 150,000 or less, that are facing worsening fiscal crises and serious cash flow problems due to extraordinary costs of the investigation and prosecution of a rash of multiple homicides.

(c) That authorization, for an interim period, be provided by this act establishing a revised procedure for small rural counties allowing them to be eligible for additional reimbursement, payable on a regularly scheduled basis, to help relieve the onerous financial burdens suddenly encumbered by excessive costs of homicide cases over which the small counties have virtually no control.

(d) That the short-term fiscal relief provided by subdivision (b) of Section 15202 of the Government Code, as amended by Section 2 of this act, recognizes and is consistent with the fiscal and programmatic relationships and responsibilities between the state and small rural counties as they involve funding and criminal justice program delivery of partnership programs of local and statewide significance.

(e) That the short-term fiscal relief provided by subdivision (b) of Section 15202 of the Government Code, as amended by Section 2 of this act, shall only be made available to the applicable counties for the costs incurred by them as set forth in that section involving activities undertaken following the filing, in the superior court, of an indictment.

SEC. 6. It is the further intent of the Legislature that the amendments to Section 15202 of the Government Code made by Section 2 of this act be given effect with respect to any extraordinary costs incurred in the investigation and prosecution of any homicide case if the costs were incurred on or after July 1, 1985.

SEC. 7. The sum of two hundred fifty thousand dollars ($250,000) is hereby appropriated from the General Fund to the Controller for expenditure in the 1985-86 fiscal year in augmentation of, and for the purpose of paying claims filed pursuant to subdivision (b) of Section 15202 of the Government Code pursuant to the standards provided in provision 2 of Item 8180-101-001 of the Budget Act of 1985. If those funds are not sufficient to satisfy those claims, the Controller shall request the Director of Finance to include any amounts necessary in a deficiency appropriation.

SEC. 8. This act is an urgency statute necessary for the immediate preservation of the public peace, health, or safety within the meaning of Article IV of the Constitution and shall go into immediate effect. The facts constituting the necessity are:

A rash of homicide cases in counties has caused a drain on the cash flow of those counties.
