Special Prosecution Grant
Final Evaluation Report*
April 1975

I. Introduction

The primary goals of the special prosecution grant are to reduce the time required for processing cases in Fulton County Superior Court and to increase the conviction rate for impact crimes. Identified impact crimes are burglary, aggravated assault, murder, rape, and robbery. The aims are to be achieved through the hiring of four additional assistant attorneys. This additional manpower is supposed to have a measurable impact on the above goals within twelve months after its inception. For purposes of evaluation baseline data were derived as follows:

Average Court Processing Time -	88 days
Conviction Rate	79.4%

The above major goals will be realized if the following occur as a result of this project:

1) Reduce the court processing time for impact defendants in the Fulton County Superior Court from an average of 88 days to an average of 78 days within 12 months from project implementation. Court processing is defined as the time from the date bound over to the Grand Jury to the date of disposition in the Superior Court.

2) Increase the conviction rate for impact defendants from 79.4% to 83.4%. Conviction is defined as guilty verdict by jury for an impact crime or a plea of guilty by the defendant to the impact crime charged in the indictment.

II. Methodolgy

The analyses performed in this report are slightly different from those previously reported because additional data are available. During January and February 1975 all cases previously reported as "Open" were re-examined. Some of these had since been "Closed" and thus were added to the statistics previously reported. Others of these cases remain open. Tables I and II present the same types of data previously reported but updated for later findings.

*This report includes all data available at this time.

It appears that cases open for more than about 180 days are those over which the district attorney's office has little or no control - bond forfeitures, for example. Therefore, two additional analyses are added to this report: one shows the precentage of cases closed as a function of time. The other analysis presents findings relative to cases still open in early 1975 - some open for more than 16 months.

III. Results

Table I presents the monthly disposition of impact defendants for the period of September, 1973 through November, 1974. This project was not fully operational until January 1974, but earlier data are included for comparison. The conviction rate for the period January-November 1974 was 78%. This compares to a base line conviction rate of 79.4%. In order to measure the trend in the conviction rate a linear regression was also run on these data. The regression equation which best fits these data is:

$$y = 77.2 + .25x,$$

where y is the conviction rate and x is the number of months since project inception. The small positive slope of .25 indicates that the conviction rate has increased since the project began, but the result is not significant.

Table II presents the court processing time for the same period. The average court processing time for the period January-November 1974 was 78 days. However as indicated previously this figure tends to be misleading because it includes cases over which the district attorney's office has little or no control. Table III shows the distribution of cases by length of court processing time. From September, 1973, through November, 1974, 85% of all cases which were closed were closed in less than 90 days. (This does not include cases still open in January and February 1975 but the district attorneys office probably has no control over these open cases. See Appendix A for further data.).

Cases open for longer than 180 days accounted for only 5% of all cases but represented 15% of total reported court processing time. Thus the reported average court processing time is a "pessimistic" estimate of accomplishment on this project. Had these cases been eliminated (because of their not being under the district attorney's control) average court processing time would have dropped to 69 days - a substantial improvement.

As mentioned previously all cases open greater than 90 days were examined in January and February 1975. For those closed cases, the results are reported in the tables. However, some cases were still open at this time - some 16 months after indictment. A tabulation of the status of these cases is given in Appendix A for the months September, 1973, through November, 1974. As can be seen from the data the majority of the cases remain open because of bond forfeiture or because the defendant was not arrested. In the aggregate the data are not too meaningful except to point out the DA's lack of control over some parameters required in this evaluation.

IV. Summary and Conclusions

After 11 months some conclusions can be drawn concerning the effectiveness of the project.*

The goal of reducing court processing time has been met - and exceeded if allowance is made for those cases not under control of the district attorney. However, the goal of increasing the conviction rate is not being met. A linear regression on the monthly conviction rates shows a slight positive slope but this is not significant.

*Only 11 months data have been supplied as of the writing of this report.
