INTRODUCTION

This directory of criminological institutes and agencies aims at making known internationally the national resources for research in the field of crime prevention and control.

The directory is based on a questionnaire circulated in 1972 and 1973 to some 570 institutes and agencies in 67 countries. The Socialist countries are being covered by a similar survey carried out by the Moscow Institute of Criminology, which will be published later by UNSDRI as a supplement to this directory. Two hundred and forty-five institutes and agencies in 43 countries are dealt with in the present directory. International institutes and agencies are listed under the countries where their headquarters are located.

The information gathered is far from being complete. Although we originally intended to collect detailed data on the activities of the criminological institutes and agencies throughout the world, it became apparent that it was necessary to limit our survey to more general information in order to secure wider coverage. While some of the replies to our questionnaire were incomplete, other institutes provided us with very detailed information. For editorial purposes we had in some cases to make a selection from the data received. Wherever possible replies have been translated into English.

This edition should be considered as provisional; we hope to receive corrigenda and/or addenda from the institutes and agencies concerned, and information from those not included in this directory. A final edition, more comprehensive and more accurate, will then be published.

It is our hope that the directory will promote co-operation between institutes which often are not aware of the activities and potentialities, and sometimes not even of the existence, of similar bodies operating in the same field.
