This report was prepared for the Law Enforcement Assistance Administration by the Bureau of the Census. In the Law Enforcement Assistance Administration, general supervision was supplied by Charles R. Kindermann, with overall program direction provided by Carol B. Kalish. Collection and processing of data was conducted in the Bureau of the Census under the general supervision of Marvin M. Thompson, Demographic Surveys Division. Carolyn Y. Thompson, chief of the National Prisoner Statistics Branch, directed the collection and processing activities, assisted by Thomas W. Petersik and Arlene J. Rasmussen. The report was written in the Crime Statistics Analysis Staff under the supervision of Robert P. Parkinson. John F. Wallerstedt directed the project. The text was prepared by Mark S. Russell.

This report was made possible only by the generous and unstinting assistance of State correctional officials and each State Office of the Attorney General. Their patience and cooperation in providing the data contained herein is gratefully acknowledged.

PREFACE

This report, one in the series on Capital Punishment published as part of the National Prisoner Statistics (NPS) program, provides information on prisoners who were confined under sentence of death in a State or Federal correctional facility at any time during calendar year 1976. Not included were persons under the death penalty whose slated admission to such a facility had not been effected as of December 31, 1976, or who were scheduled to be retained in a facility under the jurisdiction of local government authorities.

The report specifies the number of persons in the death-row population for the end of the year and, further, distributes this population by region and by State. Inmates are differentiated by age, sex, race, marital status, level of educational attainment, legal status at the time of arrest, offense for which sentenced, and length of stay on death row. The report also gives data on the number and characteristics of new death-row inmates admitted to State and Federal correctional institutions during the year and on those removed from under the penalty of death, as well as the method of removal. It also provides information on the number of executions carried out during the 1930-76 period and on developments affecting the status of capital punishment laws during 1976.

Two changes in concept and format differentiate this report from earlier issues of this NPS series. First, beginning in 1976, inmates sentenced to death under statutory provisions subsequently found unconstitutional have been removed from the death-row count as of the date of the court's finding rather than the date of administrative implementation of that finding, as had been the practice prior to 1976. This change was instituted because immediately upon the court's ruling, the inmate no longer is liable to execution. Second, data on method of disposition in 1976 have been displayed in much greater detail than previously.

Based on a voluntary reporting system, the NPS program was instituted to collect and interpret data on inmates of State and Federal correctional institutions. The program was initiated by the Bureau of the Census in 1926 and was transferred to the Bureau of Prisons in 1950 and to the Law Enforcement Assistance Administration (LEAA) in 1971. Since 1972, the Bureau of the Census, acting as collecting agent for LEAA, has had responsibility for compiling the relevant statistical data.

GENERAL FINDINGS

A total of 444 inmates under sentence of death was held in State and Federal correctional institutions on December 31, 1976, compared with 473 a year earlier.¹ This 6 percent reduction during 1976 in the death-row population, following 2 successive years of marked increases, was the net result of the admission of 233 capital offenders, the overwhelming majority sentenced to death for murder, and of the removal of the death penalty from 262 who had received capital sentences during the year or earlier. Although the 262 who had their death sentences changed during 1976 were not a record number, they nonetheless constituted an unusually large group; most, including over 100 in North Carolina alone, were relieved of the death penalty as the result of court decisions invalidating the statutory provisions under which they had been sentenced. Of those relieved of the death penalty during the year, 186 were resentenced to life imprisonment, 6 had their sentences reduced to a specified term of years, 29 were granted new trials, 3 had their sentences vacated, 2 died from causes other than execution, and 2, including 1 who was subsequently retried, acquitted, and freed, had their convictions reversed. The remaining 34 had effectively been removed from the risk of execution as the result of court actions, although they had not been resentenced or granted a new trial as of December 31, 1976.

The yearend count of black prisoners under sentence of death may have dropped below that of whites for the first time since 1966, when racial identification of death-row inmates was begun in this series, although changes in the method of defining the death-row population in 1976 preclude certainty. Clearly, however, whites outnumbered blacks under sentence of death at the end of 1976. Only one prisoner slated for execution was held in a Federal prison on December 31, 1976; all the rest were in the custody of State correctional systems.

Twenty-eight States held prisoners under sentence of death on December 31, 1975, whereas 22 States and the District of Columbia had no such inmates. A year later, the number of States holding at least one death-row inmate had declined to 23. During 1976, the count of prisoners held for execution rose in 19 States, including one—Idaho—that had no such prisoners 12 months earlier. The largest increases were recorded in Ohio, with a net gain of 34, and in California, with 32. In eight States, seven of which were in the South,² the number of prisoners declined during 1976. In six of the eight—Delaware, New Mexico, North Carolina, Oklahoma, South Carolina, and Virginia—the number was reduced to zero. The largest reductions were those in North Carolina (from 103 on the last day of 1975 to 0 a year later) and in Oklahoma (from 30 to 0) and resulted from judicial findings during the year that the relevant death penalty provisions were unconstitutional.

¹The total of 473 reported for December 31, 1975 represents a revision of the figure for that date published in Capital Punishment, 1975, NPS Bulletin No. SD-NPS-CP-4, July 1976. See Methodology for further explanation.

The South held the largest proportion of death-row inmates on December 31, 1976, even though it was the only one of the four regions with a net decline in the death-row population during 1976. Of the 443 prisoners held under sentence of death in State correctional systems on the last day of 1976, 246, or 56 percent, were in the South. The West accounted for 24 percent, the North Central Region for 18 percent, and the Northeast for 2 percent. Nine of the 17 Southern jurisdictions had prisoners awaiting execution, compared with 3 of the 9 in the Northeast, 3 of the 12 in the North Central Region, and 8 of the 13 in the West. Five States in the South held 30 or more death-row inmates. In the other three regions, a majority of those under sentence of death in each region were held in a single State. Pennsylvania accounted for 60 percent of the total in the Northeast, Ohio for 85 percent in the North Central Region, and California for 63 percent in the West.

Among individual States, Florida, with 81 persons on death row, had the largest number of prisoners awaiting execution at the end of 1976. California with 68 prisoners, and Ohio, with 67, ranked second and third. Collectively, these three States accounted for nearly one-half of the total death-row population in the United States.

Prisoners under sentence of death

The typical inmate held in State correctional systems under sentence of death at the end of 1976 was a young male who had not completed high school and who had been given a capital sentence for murder.

²See Table 2 for the States included in each region.

The median age of all death-row prisoners, as of December 31, 1976, was 27 years, 1 year older than at the end of 1975. The youngest inmate was age 17, and the oldest was age 68. By region, the median age of prisoners under sentence of death varied only marginally. It was 26 years in the Northeast, the North Central Region, and the South, and 28 years in the West. Among some of the individual States, however, there was somewhat greater disparity. Of the 15 States holding five or more prisoners under sentence of death, the median age of the death-row population was lowest in Arkansas (22 years) and highest in Indiana (36 years).

Males predominated overwhelmingly among those awaiting execution, as they have in the past. Only six women were under sentence of death at the end of 1976, three in Ohio, two in California, and one in Florida. All six had been sentenced to death for murder.

Whites made up a majority (55 percent) of the death-row population on the last day of 1976, although as in prior years blacks continued to account for a proportion of the total far in excess of their representation in the national population. At the end of 1976 there were no prisoners of races other than white or black under sentence of death. Regionally, the share of whites among prisoners under sentence of death was highest in the West (69 percent) and lowest in the Northeast (30 percent). The proportion of whites on death row was 44 percent in the North Central Region and 53 percent in the South.

Four hundred twenty-one inmates, or 95 percent of those on death row, had been sentenced to death for murder. In addition to their murder sentences, six of these prisoners also had received additional death sentences for other crimes—two for kidnaping, one for kidnaping and rape, one for kidnaping and robbery, and one each for rape and robbery.³ Of the 23 inmates not sentenced for murder, 18 had received the capital penalty for rape, three for kidnaping, and two for assault committed as a prison inmate serving a life term. Two of those under sentence of death for kidnaping also had concurrently received capital sentences for a second offense—one for rape and one for robbery. As has been the case since at least 1971, all those whose convictions involved rape were in jurisdictions located in the South. Blacks made up 83 percent of those awaiting execution for rape at the end of 1976.

Of the 436 death-row inmates whose marital status at the time of imprisonment was reported, 47 percent had never been married, 33 percent were married, 18 percent were divorced or separated, and 2 percent were widowed. Blacks were much more likely than whites never to have been married, the proportion amounting to 60 percent, compared with 37 percent for whites.

Two-thirds of all prisoners under sentence of death had not completed high school. Information on the level of educational attainment was reported for 362 of the 444 inmates on death row at the end of 1976. Of these, 27 percent had completed no more than 8 years of formal education, 40 percent attended but had not been graduated from high school, 26 percent terminated their formal schooling after receiving a high school diploma, and 7 percent had some college training. A majority of both whites and blacks had not been graduated from high school, although a somewhat greater proportion of blacks (77 percent) than whites (71 percent) had entered high school. On the other hand, about 9 percent of the white inmates on death row, compared with 5 percent of their black counterparts, had received some college training.

Among the 346 prisoners under sentence of death as of the end of 1976 for whom the relevant data were reported, 274, or 79 percent (82 percent of the blacks and 76 percent of the whites), had not been under the jurisdiction of the courts or correctional agencies at the time of their arrest for a capital offense. Of the 72 remaining inmates, 48 were on parole at the time they were arrested, 12 were in prison, 10 were escapees from prison, and 2 were on probation.

Some 38 percent of all inmates awaiting execution as of December 31, 1976, had received the death penalty and had entered State correctional facilities during 1976; the remainder had been sentenced and were received in prior years. However, the death-row population contained no inmates on the last day of 1976 who had been sentenced prior to the Furman decision (1972), in which the Supreme Court found that the discretion exercised in the application of the death penalty had tended to be arbitrary and capricious, and, hence, inconsistent with the Eighth Amendment prohibition against "cruel and unusual punishment."

The median length of time spent on death row as of the end of 1976 was 14 months.⁴ No prisoner had spent more than 4 years on death row. Inmates in the South recorded the longest median time spent under sentence of death—17 months; the shortest median time elapsed (8 months) was registered among death-row prisoners held in the Northeast. Of the 15 States with five or more prisoners awaiting execution at the end of 1976, the median time spent on death row was highest in Wyoming (29 months), followed by Georgia (23 months), and Indiana (19 months).

⁴Data on time elapsed since sentencing are not strictly comparable with similar data for prior years because, beginning in 1976, inmates sentenced to death under statutory provisions subsequently found unconstitutional were removed from the death-row count as of the date of the finding rather than the date of administrative implementation of that finding, as had been the practice. See Methodology for further explanation.

Death sentences imposed

Two hundred and thirty-three persons who had been sentenced to death were admitted to State correctional systems during 1976, a total some 18 percent below the figure for 1975. Of these, 224, or 96 percent, were given the death penalty for murder; 5 for rape; 2 for kidnaping; and 2 for assault while serving a life term in prison.⁵ Regionally, 58 percent of all new death-row admissions were recorded in Southern States, compared with 23 percent in the West, 16 percent in the North Central Region, and 3 percent in the Northeast. California and Ohio each admitted 34 persons, followed by Florida with 29 and North Carolina with 22. Collectively, these four States accounted for over one-half of all capital offenders who entered State correctional institutions during 1976. Whites made up about three-fifths of the total admitted under sentence of death during 1976; blacks, two-fifths. Four women who had received death sentences were committed to State institutions during 1976—one each in California, Florida, North Carolina, and Ohio; all had received the death penalty for murder.

Persons newly committed to death row were, on the average, young. Some 45 percent were under age 25; less than 10 percent were age 40 and over. Almost three-fifths of the blacks, compared with 35 percent of the whites, were under age 25.

Of the 184 prisoners for whom information on educational attainment was reported, about three-fifths had not been graduated from high school; 22 percent had completed 8 years or less of formal education, while only 11 percent had attended college. Whites who had been given the death sentence and were admitted to State correctional systems during 1976 generally had a higher level of educational attainment than blacks. Forty-five percent of the whites, as opposed to one-third of the blacks, had at least completed high school. Furthermore, 12 percent of the whites had attended college; the corresponding proportion among blacks was 9 percent.

⁵Four prisoners sentenced to death for murder had received other death sentences as well—one each was for kidnaping, robbery, kidnaping and rape, and kidnaping and robbery. In addition, one inmate given the capital sentence for kidnaping had received a second death penalty for robbery.

Among the 223 newly committed inmates for whom marital status was reported, 51 percent had never been married, 32 percent were married, 13 percent were divorced or separated, and 4 percent were widowed. Blacks were much more likely than whites never to have been married, the proportions amounting to 64 percent and 42 percent, respectively. One-fifth of the whites, compared with 3 percent of the blacks, were divorced or separated at the time of imprisonment for their capital offense.

Information pertaining to prearrest legal status was reported for 198 of the 233 persons admitted to prison under the death penalty during 1976. Of these, 84 percent had not been under the jurisdiction of court or correctional authorities at the time of arrest for their capital offense. Among the remaining 32 persons, 24 were on parole, 7 were in prison, and 1 was on probation.

Dispositions from the death penalty

A total of 262 prisoners on death row received sentence changes during 1976. This high number of dispositions largely resulted from the fact that during the year death penalty statutes in nine States were declared partially or wholly unconstitutional by either the U.S. Supreme Court or a State Supreme Court.⁶ Virtually all inmates affected by these judicial rulings either were granted a new trial or received a reduction of their sentences. Among the 262 inmates whose sentences were changed in 1976, final disposition was reported for all but 66. Of those prisoners still subject to further legal or administrative action before their ultimate disposition was determined, 34 (18 in South Carolina and 16 in Oklahoma) were removed from under sentence of death as a direct result of court decisions declaring death penalty laws unconstitutional, while 29 others, including 21 in Mississippi, were granted new trials. Two inmates in Georgia and one in Arizona had their sentences reversed as a result of court rulings, although their convictions were upheld.

Among the 196 prisoners whose final disposition was determined, 192 were given a reduced sentence. Ninety-seven percent of these, a majority held in North Carolina alone, had their sentences changed to life imprisonment. Two prisoners had their convictions and corresponding sentences set aside, and thus they were under no further legal obligation for the offense for which the capital penalty had been imposed. Two others, both held in California, died while on death row.

Among the prisoners whose death penalties were rescinded during 1976, 57 percent were black, 40 percent were white, and 3 percent were American Indians. Five women sentenced to death for murder, four in North Carolina, and one in Oklahoma, were relieved of the capital sentence in 1976. Two hundred thirty-six prisoners whose status underwent change during 1976 had been given the capital sentence for murder, while 26 others had received the death penalty for rape.⁷

Two-thirds of the inmates removed from death row were, under age 30, including three-fourths of the affected blacks and 58 percent of the whites. The median length of time spent on death row by this group was 13 months—14 months for blacks and 12 months for whites.⁸ The differences in levels of educational attainment and in marital status among the prisoner group relieved of the death penalty during 1976 were of the same relative proportions as those, previously discussed, who were still under sentence of death on December 31, 1976.

Executions

The year 1976 was the ninth in a row during which none of the prisoners under sentence of death in the United States was executed. The last such execution prior to December 31, 1976, took place in Colorado on June 2, 1967. During the period 1930-67, 3,859 persons were executed under civil jurisdiction—3,826 by State authorities and 33 by the Federal government.⁹ Of the total executed, 3,334, or 86 percent, had been convicted of murder; 455, or 12 percent, had been sentenced for rape; and the remainder had been found guilty of such offenses as robbery, kidnaping, burglary, sabotage, aggravated assault, and espionage.

Some three-fifths of the executions in the United States during 1930-67 were carried out in the South, as shown in the accompanying table.

⁷Four prisoners experiencing sentence changes had received the death sentence for murder and for a second offense as well—two each for rape and arson. In addition, one inmate given the death penalty for rape had received a second death sentence for burglary.

⁸See footnote 4.

⁹During this period, the U.S. Army (including the Air Force) carried out 160 executions—148 in 1942-50; 3 each in 1954, 1955, and 1957; and 1 each in 1958, 1959, and 1961. Of the total, 106 were for murder (including 21 involving rape); 53 were for rape; and 1 for desertion. The U.S. Navy has executed no one since 1849.

Percent distribution of executions in the U.S., by region, 1930-67

Total	100%
Federal	1%
State	99%
Northeast	16%
North Central	10%
South	60%
West	13%

The largest single number of executions (366) took place in Georgia, followed by New York (329). Three other States—California, North Carolina, and Texas—each carried out more than 200 executions during the 1930-67 period.

Although the proportion of executions involving blacks varied significantly from year to year, blacks accounted for 54 percent of those executed during the 38-year period, whites for 45 percent, and members of other races for 1 percent. Blacks made up some 72 percent of those put to death in the South during 1930-67, and 36 percent, 29 percent, and 16 percent in the North Central Region, the Northeast, and the West, respectively. The imbalance in the proportion of executions involving blacks was most pronounced with respect to rape. Whereas blacks accounted for 49 percent of those executed for murder during 1930-67 (and 44 percent of those executed for "other" offenses), they made up 89 percent of those put to death for rape. In 9 of the years during the 1930-67 period, blacks constituted all of those executed for rape, and in only 3 years did the proportion fall below 80 percent. With the exception of seven executions in Missouri, all executions of blacks for rape took place in the South.

Of the total of 42 executions of members of races other than white or black, 19 involved American Indians; 13, Filipinos; 8, Chinese; and 2, Japanese. Except for two American Indians executed for rape, all had been convicted of murder. During 1930-67, a total of 32 women were executed, including 2 who were put to death by Federal civil authorities.

Status of death penalty laws

As of December 31, 1976, there were 10 States in which the death penalty had been abolished explicitly by statute or precluded by statutory silence. In these States, except for North Dakota, this prohibition had prevailed prior to the landmark Furman decision (1972), in which the Supreme Court found that the discretion exercised in the application of the death penalty had tended to be arbitrary and capricious and, hence, inconsistent with the Eighth Amendment prohibition against "cruel and unusual punishment." Of the 41 jurisdictions with capital punishment statutes on the books at the time of this decision, 10 (9 States and the District of Columbia) had not enacted new legislation as of the end of 1976. In these jurisdictions, death penalty statutes were either of questionable validity or had been declared unconstitutional by the courts. In each of the remaining 31 States, one or more statutory revisions had been enacted since Furman. During 1976 alone, death penalty statutes were revised in 7 States, including Mississippi, where the State Supreme Court amended the capital punishment law. The Federal Criminal Code contains death penalty statutes predating Furman; these have not been revised except for that section of the Code relating to the penalty for aircraft piracy, which was revised in 1974.

Generally, revised capital punishment statutes have attempted to assure the equitable treatment required in the Furman decision by limiting the death penalty to persons found guilty of committing only certain crimes. Specifically defined types of murder, such as the killing of a law enforcement officer, murder by a prisoner serving a life sentence, murder for pecuniary gain, and murder during the perpetration of a felony, are included among the relevant offenses. Some States continue to authorize the death penalty for premeditated murder, for rape, and, more rarely, for treason. In addition to stipulating in detail the types of offenses requiring the death penalty, some State statutes also make imposition of capital punishment contingent upon the existence of at least one aggravating circumstance and no mitigating circumstances to the crime. These circumstances, varying according to jurisdiction, are spelled out separately in the statutes and are generally weighed by the jury or judge at separate sentence hearings.

In a series of decisions handed down during 1976, the courts found that death penalty statutes that did not allow the sentencing authority (judge or jury) to consider mitigating circumstances were unconstitutional. Epitomizing this finding was the U.S. Supreme Court's pronouncement in Woodson v. North Carolina (July 6, 1976) that "the fundamental respect for humanity underlying the Eighth Amendment . . . requires consideration of the character and record of the individual offender and the circumstances of the particular offense as a constitutionally indispensable part of the process of inflicting the death penalty." As a result of this and similar decisions, the mandatory capital punishment statutes in several States were struck down during 1976.

In all, from the time of the Furman decision to the end of 1976, revised death penalty statutes in 10 States—California, Delaware, Georgia, Illinois, Louisiana, Maryland, New Mexico, North Carolina, Oklahoma, and South Carolina—had been declared unconstitutional in whole or in part as a result of judicial rulings. A number of States have continued to make revisions in an effort to meet court requirements. In Louisiana and Oklahoma, death penalty statutes declared unconstitutional by the U.S. Supreme Court in July 1976 were revised later in the year. As of the end of 1976, further court tests of death penalty statutes were pending, including some that predated the Furman decision.

METHODOLOGY

This report is based upon information for 1976 provided by the Federal Bureau of Prisons and by correctional authorities in the 50 States and the District of Columbia in response to a mail canvass and upon data published in previous reports in the Capital Punishment series.

In the mail canvass, all jurisdictions were asked to complete a form (NPS-8) for each prisoner they held under sentence of death at any time during 1976. The form included questions on the inmate's sex, race, date of birth, capital offense for which imprisoned, marital status at time of imprisonment, highest year of education completed, legal status at time of arrest, date of first sentence for capital offense, and legal status as of December 31, 1976. Persons under sentence of death in States granting principal jurisdiction to the county of conviction were to be included only if such persons had at any time entered a State correctional system. Excluded were those under sentence of death who remained in local correctional institutions pending exhaustion of the appellate process or who for other reasons had not been admitted to a State or Federal correctional institution by December 31, 1976. Respondents were asked to indicate all offenses for which capital punishment had been levied. Multiple death sentences for the same offense, e.g., murder, were not distinguished, but multiple sentences for different offenses, e.g., murder and rape, were noted, although only the death penalty resulting from the most serious offense was tallied. Incomplete data, as well as information inconsistent with earlier years, were augmented or clarified through telephone follow-ups to the mail canvass. The final completion rate was 100 percent for all jurisdictions with inmates on death row; all other jurisdictions were canvassed and had no inmates on death row.

In the tallying of data, one major procedural change was made during 1976. For NPS purposes, beginning in 1976, inmates sentenced to death under statutory provisions subsequently found unconstitutional by the courts are removed from the death-row count as of the date of that finding rather than on the date of administrative implementation of that finding, as had been the practice. As a result of this change, some data in this report are not strictly comparable with counterpart items in earlier issues in the series. Most notably affected are the length of time elapsed from sentencing to disposition, in the case of those removed from under the death penalty, and the amount of time expired since sentencing, in the instance of those still on death row at the end of the year. Both measures have been decreased as the result of the procedural change.

Some of the figures for December 31, 1975 presented in this report disagree with those for that date published in Capital Punishment, 1975, NPS Bulletin No. SD-NPS-CP-4, July 1976, for the following reasons:

a) They exclude 5 inmates improperly reported on death row at the end of 1975 (3 in Georgia, 1 in Massachusetts, and 1 in Texas).

b) They include 31 inmates sentenced to death before 1976 but either reported late to the NPS program or not admitted to the custody of the relevant correctional authorities by December 31, 1975 (9 in Tennessee, 7 in Texas, 5 each in Georgia and Louisiana, 2 in Oklahoma, and 1 each in Alabama, Pennsylvania, and the Federal correctional system).

c) They exclude 32 inmates sentenced to death under statutory provisions found unconstitutional by the courts before 1976 and, accordingly, as described above, removed from the death-row count as of the date of the finding rather than, as had been the practice before 1976, on the date of the administrative implementation of that finding. This procedural change affected 8 inmates in Massachusetts, 6 in Louisiana, 3 each in California, Illinois, and Pennsylvania, 2 each in Georgia, Kentucky, Maryland, and Utah, and 1 in Virginia.

¹In this category, the 8 Federal executions were for sabotage (6) and espionage (2).
The 9 executions in North Carolina and the 2 in Alabama were for burglary. In California, the 6 executions were for aggravated assault committed by prisoners under a life sentence.

²As States, Alaska and Hawaii are included in the series beginning January 1, 1960.

¹Total for January 1, 1976, was revised from that reported for December 31, 1975. See "Methodology" for explanation.

²Total for January 1, 1975, was revised from that reported for December 31, 1974, to include two prisoners in Florida, two in Georgia, one in Louisiana, one in Massachusetts, one in North Carolina, and three in Texas who were not reported by these jurisdictions in their counts of those awaiting execution on December 31, 1974. In addition, the figure excludes one prisoner in Georgia, one in Louisiana, and one in Pennsylvania who were incorrectly reported as awaiting execution on December 31, 1974.

³Total for January 1, 1974, was revised from that reported for December 31, 1973, to exclude one prisoner in Alabama, two in Arizona, and one in Florida who were incorrectly reported as awaiting execution on December 31, 1973. In addition, the figure includes one prisoner in Massachusetts who was incorrectly excluded from the count of those awaiting execution on December 31, 1973, but it excludes another Massachusetts prisoner who was incorrectly reported as awaiting execution on December 31, 1973, but had actually been relieved of the death sentence in September 1972.

⁴Total for January 1, 1973, was revised from that reported for December 31, 1972, to include one prisoner in California who was incorrectly reported as awaiting execution on December 31, 1972.

⁵Total for January 1, 1971, was revised from that reported for December 31, 1970, to exclude two prisoners in Florida, one in Louisiana, and one in Georgia who were incorrectly reported as awaiting execution on December 30, 1970, and to include one prisoner in Louisiana and two in Pennsylvania who were incorrectly excluded from the count of those awaiting execution on December 30, 1970.

⁶Prior to 1974, includes prisoners sentenced in previous years but reported late to the NPS program, as well as prisoners returned to death row after previously being reported as either escaped or transferred to a mental hospital.

⁷Includes commutations, resentencings, reversals, grants for new trials, other forms of release from the death sentence, and deaths other than executions.

⁸Prior to 1968, includes those prisoners who were not reported to the NPS program until the following year.

NOTE: Some of the above figures for December 31, 1975 disagree with those for that date published in Capital Punishment, 1975, NPS Bulletin No. SD-NPS-CP-4, July 1976. See "Methodology" for explanation.

¹Data include persons who received separate death sentences for more than one offense, although these prisoners are enumerated only by the most serious offense for which the capital penalty was imposed. See "Methodology."

²The number of prisoners under sentence of death as of December 31, 1976 included six females sentenced to death for murder. Of this total, four were white and two were black.

³The total number of inmates under sentence of death for murder on December 31, 1975 included four prisoners previously reported in the 1975 issuance of this National Prisoner Statistics (NPS) series as under sentence of death for aggravated kidnapping.

⁴One prisoner under sentence of death for rape was erroneously reported in the 1974 and 1975 issuances of this National Prisoner Statistics (NPS) series as under sentence of death for murder.

¹Data for Georgia include persons who received death sentences for more than one offense, although these prisoners are enumerated only by the most serious offense for which the capital penalty was imposed. See "Methodology."

² Georgia does not admit condemned persons to its correctional system until after certain mandatory appeals are exhausted. It is estimated that there were about 25 persons under sentence of death who had not been admitted to the correctional system as of December 31, 1976. These persons are excluded from this report.

NOTE: For the status of death penalty statutes in each jurisdiction, see Table 28. With the exception of the categories "New trial granted" and "Sentencing provisions of statute struck down," all dispositions are final. As for the two methods above, prisoners are subject to further legal or administrative action before their ultimate disposition is determined.

¹Includes inmates granted a new trial in order to determine their guilt or innocence, and if convicted, their sentence as well.

²Prisoners whose conviction and corresponding sentence have been set aside or revoked such that they are under no further legal obligation for the offense for which the capital penalty was imposed.

³Includes persons who had their convictions affirmed but their death sentences vacated.

NOTE: For the status of death penalty statutes in each jurisdiction, see Table 28.

¹Data for North Carolina include persons who received separate death sentences for more than one offense, although these prisoners are enumerated only by the most serious offense for which the capital penalty is imposed. See "Methodology."

NOTE: For the status of death penalty statutes in each jurisdiction, see Table 28.
¹Data for Florida include one prisoner sentenced to death in 1972, resentenced to life imprisonment after the Furman decision, but once again given the capital penalty in 1975, following a successful appeal by the State of Florida. For the purposes of this table, the sentencing date used for this inmate was the appropriate month in 1975 during which the prisoner received his most recent death sentence.

NOTE: There have been no Federal executions since 1963.

¹Under the Federal kidnaping statute prior to 1968, the death penalty could be imposed if the victim was not released unharmed. In all of the cases in this table but the one in 1936, the victim was killed by the kidnaper.

²Includes 2 cases of rape on a Federal reservation (1957), 2 cases of espionage (1935), 6 cases of sabotage (1942), and 2 cases of bank robbery with homicide (1938).

Table 28. Status of death penalty statutes in the

Jurisdiction	Status
Capital punishment provisions, post-Furman statutes ¹
Federal	Section of the United States Code relating to death penalty for aircraft piracy revised 1974. All other pre-Furman Federal death penalty statutes unchanged.
Arizona	Death penalty partially abolished 1916 ² and restored 1918. Statutes revised May 14, 1973.
Arkansas	Statutes revised July 24, 1973 and again January 1, 1976.
California	Death penalty abolished 1972, and restored by referendum November 1972. Statutes revised January 1, 1974. Death penalty in part declared unconstitutional by the State Supreme Court December 7, 1976. Extent of the decision's applicability still pending.
Connecticut	Statutes revised October 1, 1973.
Delaware	Death penalty abolished 1958 and restored 1961. Discretionary provisions of the 1961 legislation struck down by the State Supreme Court November 1, 1972, and remaining provisions declared constitutional. Statutes revised March 29, 1974. Death penalty declared unconstitutional by the State Supreme Court October 22, 1976.
Florida	Statutes revised December 8, 1972.
Georgia	Statutes revised March 28, 1973. Death penalty in part declared unconstitutional by the State Supreme Court April 1976.
Idaho	Statutes revised March 17, 1973.
Illinois	Statutes revised November 8, 1973, but declared unconstitutional by the State Supreme Court September 29, 1975.

NOTE: "Legal" signifies that the death penalty could be imposed for murder.

¹In the case of Furman vs. Georgia, June 29, 1972, the U.S. Supreme Court found that, as being administered, the death penalty constituted "cruel and unusual punishment" in violation of the Eighth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution. The revised statutes, most of which provide a mandatory death penalty for specified types of murder, represent an attempt on the part of the States to enact capital punishment statutes that will eliminate the possibility of arbitrary application and thus conform to the standards set down in the Furman decision. The constitutionality of such statutes remains to be determined by the courts.

²Death penalty retained for treason.

³Death penalty retained for the crime of killing a police officer or prison or jail guard while performing his duties, and in cases where the jury recommends the death penalty and the defendant commits a second capital felony after time for due deliberation following commission of first capital felony.

⁴Death penalty retained for persons found guilty of killing a police officer acting in line of duty and for prisoners under a life sentence who murder a guard or inmate while in confinement or while escaping from confinement.
