ORIGIN AND SCOPE OF THE COMMISSION

Despite the range and impact of the Commission's achievements, inquiries continue to be made about its jurisdiction, the way it functions and its importance to a better New Jersey. The Commission believes this important information should be conveniently available. Accordingly, the pertinent facts are summarized below.

The New Jersey State Commission of Investigation (S.C.I.) was an outgrowth of extensive research and public hearings conducted in 1968 by the Joint Legislative Committee to Study Crime and the System of Criminal Justice in New Jersey. That Committee was under direction from the Legislature to find ways to correct what was a serious and intensifying crime problem in New Jersey.

Indeed, by the late 1960s New Jersey had the unattractive image of being a corrupt haven for flourishing organized crime operations. William F. Hyland, who was Attorney General from 1974-1978, vividly recalled that unfortunate era in testimony before the Governor's Committee to Evaluate the S.C.I. He said in part:

"...our state quickly developed a national reputation as a governmental cesspool, a bedroom for hired killers and a dumping ground for their victims. Whether this was a deserved reputation was not necessarily material. The significant thing was that this became an accepted fact that seriously undermined confidence in state law enforcement."

The Joint Legislative Committee in its report issued in the Spring of 1968 found that a crisis in crime control did exist in New Jersey. The Committee attributed the expanding activities of organized crime to "failure to some considerable degree in the system itself, official corruption, or both" and offered a series of sweeping recommendations for improving various areas of the criminal justice system in the state.

The two highest priority recommendations were for a new State Criminal Justice unit in the executive branch of state government and an independent State Commission of Investigation, patterned of the late Chief Justice Joseph Weintraub of the New Jersey Supreme Court, former Associate Justice Nathan L. Jacobs of that same Court, and former Judge Edward F. Broderick of the New Jersey Superior Court.

That Committee in its October 6, 1975, public report rejected summarily any suggestion that the S.C.I. duplicates work of other agencies. Indeed, the Committee said the record demonstrated convincingly that the Commission performs a valuable function and that there is continuing need for the S.C.I.’s contributions to both the legislative process and the executive branch.

The Committee concluded that it saw no likelihood that the need for the S.C.I. will abate, and recommended amendment of the S.C.I.’s statute to make the Commission a permanent rather than a temporary agency. In support of this statement, the Committee declared:

“Our evaluation of the work of the S.C.I. convinces us that the agency has performed a very valuable function... The current public apathyism of government performance emphasizes the continuing need for a credible agency to delve into the problems that plague our institutions, an agency which can provide truthful information and sound recommendations. There must be constant public awareness if we are to retain a healthy and vibrant system of government. Indeed we see no likelihood that the need for the S.C.I. will abate...”

To insure the integrity and impartiality of the Commission, no more than two of the four Commissioners may be of the same political party. Two Commissioners are appointed by the Governor and one each by the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the Assembly. If that may be said the Commission by law is bipartisan and by concern and action is nonpartisan.

The paramount statutory responsibilities vested in the Commission are set forth in Section 2 of its statute. This section provides:

2. The Commission shall have the duty and power to conduct investigations in connection with:

after the New York State Commission of Investigation, now in its 24th year of probing crime, official corruption and other governmental abuses.

The Committee envisioned the proposed Criminal Justice unit and the Commission of Investigation as complementary agencies in the fight against crime and corruption. The Criminal Justice unit was to be a large organization with extensive manpower and authority to coordinate and conduct criminal investigations and prosecutions throughout the state. The Commission of Investigation was to be a relatively small but expert body which would conduct fact-finding investigations, bring the facts to the public’s attention, and make recommendations to the Governor and the Legislature for improvements in laws and the operations of government.

The Joint Legislative Committee’s recommendations prompted immediate supportive legislative and executive action. New Jersey now has a Criminal Justice Division in the State Department of Law and Public Safety and an independent State Commission of Investigation* which is structured as a commission of the Legislature. The new laws were designed to prevent any conflict between the functions of this purely investigative, fact-finding Commission and the prosecutorial authorities of the state. The latter have the responsibility of pressing other charges of violations of law and bringing the wrongdoers to punishment. The Commission has the responsibility of publicly exposing evil by fact-finding investigations and of recommending new laws and other remedies to protect the integrity of the political process.

The complementary role of the S.C.I. was emphasized anew by the Governor’s Committee to Evaluate the S.C.I., which conducted in 1975 a comprehensive and impartial analysis of the Commission’s record and function. The Committee’s members consisted of the late Chief Justice Joseph Weintraub of the New Jersey Supreme Court, former Associate Justice Nathan L. Jacobs of that same Court, and former Judge Edward F. Broderick of the New Jersey Superior Court.

That Committee in its October 6, 1975, public report rejected summarily any suggestion that the S.C.I. duplicates work of other agencies. Indeed, the Committee said the record demonstrated convincingly that the Commission performs a valuable function and that there is continuing need for the S.C.I.’s contributions to both the legislative process and the executive branch.

The Committee concluded that it saw no likelihood that the need for the S.C.I. will abate, and recommended amendment of the S.C.I.’s statute to make the Commission a permanent rather than a temporary agency. In support of this statement, the Committee declared:

“Our evaluation of the work of the S.C.I. convinces us that the agency has performed a very valuable function... The current public apathyism of government performance emphasizes the continuing need for a credible agency to delve into the problems that plague our institutions, an agency which can provide truthful information and sound recommendations. There must be constant public awareness if we are to retain a healthy and vibrant system of government. Indeed we see no likelihood that the need for the S.C.I. will abate...”

To insure the integrity and impartiality of the Commission, no more than two of the four Commissioners may be of the same political party. Two Commissioners are appointed by the Governor and one each by the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the Assembly. If that may be said the Commission by law is bipartisan and by concern and action is nonpartisan.

The paramount statutory responsibilities vested in the Commission are set forth in Section 2 of its statute. This section provides:

2. The Commission shall have the duty and power to conduct investigations in connection with:

*The bill creating the New Jersey State Commission of Investigation was introduced April 29, 1968, in the Senate. Legislative approval of that measure was completed September 4, 1968. The bill created the Commission for an initial term beginning January 4, 1969, and ending December 31, 1974. It is cited as Public Law, 1968, Chapter 266, N.J.S.A., et seq. The Legislature on November 12, 1973, enacted amendment of the bill as Public Law, 1973, Chapter 238, which renewed the Commission for another term ending December 31, 1979. A bill granting the Commission an extension of its terms for another five years until December 31, 1984, gained final approval by the Legislature and the Governor in December, 1978. The full text of Section 2 of its statute, appears in Appendix II on p. 95.

The Governor’s Committee to Evaluate the S.C.I. was created in April, 1975, by executive order of the Governor after the introduction in the Senate of a bill to terminate the S.C.I. touched off a backlash of public criticism. The measure was subsequently withdrawn.
(a) The faithful execution and effective enforcement of the laws of the state, with particular reference but not limited to organized crime and racketeering.

(b) The conduct of public officers and public employees, and of officers and employees of public corporations and authorities.

(c) Any matter concerning the public peace, public safety and public justice.

The statute provides further that the Commission shall conduct investigations by direction of the Governor and by concurrent resolution of the Legislature. The Commission also shall conduct investigations of the affairs of any state department or agency at the request of the head of a department or agency.

Thus, the enabling statute assigned to the Commission, as an investigative, fact-finding body, a wide range of responsibilities. It is highly mobile, may compel testimony and production of other evidence by subpoena, and has authority to grant immunity to witnesses. Although the Commission does not have and cannot exercise any prosecutorial functions, the statute does provide for the Commission to refer information to prosecutorial authorities.

One of the Commission’s prime responsibilities, when it uncovers irregularities, improprieties, misconduct or corruption, is to bring the facts to the attention of the public. The objective is to insure corrective action. The importance of public exposure was put most succinctly by a New York Times analysis of the nature of such a Commission:

Some people would put the whole business in the lap of a District Attorney (prosecutor), arguing that if he does not bring indictments, there is not much the people can do.

But this misses the primary purpose of the State Investigation Commission. It is not to probe outright criminal acts by those in public employment. That is the job of the regular investigation arms of the law.

As a legislative, investigative agency, the S.C.I. is not unique, since investigative agencies of the legislative branch of government are almost as old as the Republic. The first bi-cameral Congressional investigating committee was established in 1792 to inquire into the causes of the failure of the last expedition of Major General St. Clair.” (2 Annual of Congress 403—1792).

Instead, the Commission has been charged by the Legislature to check on, and to expose, lapses in the faithful and effective performance of duty by public employees.

Is sheer non-criminality to be the only standard of behavior to which a public official is to be held? Or does the public have a right to know of laxity, inefficiency, incompetences, waste and other failures in the work for which it pays?

The exact format for public action by the S.C.I. is subject in each instance to a formal determination by the Commission which takes into consideration factors of complexity of subject matter and of conspicuousness, nearness and thoroughness in presentation of the facts. The Commission may proceed by way of a public hearing or a public report, or both.

In the course of its conduct, the Commission adheres to the New Jersey Code of Fair Procedure, the requirements for which were incorporated in the Commission's enabling law as amended and re-enacted in 1979. These provisions satisfy the protections which the Legislature by statute and the Judiciary by interpretation have provided for witnesses called at private and public hearings and for individuals mentioned in the Commission’s public proceedings. Such procedural obligations include a requirement that any individual who feels adversely affected by the testimony or other evidence presented in a public action by the Commission shall be afforded an opportunity to make a statement under oath relevant to the testimony or other evidence complained of. The statements, subject to determination of relevancy, are incorporated in the records of the Commission's public proceedings. Before resolving to proceed to a public action, the Commission analyzes and evaluates investigative data in private in keeping with its obligation to avoid unnecessary stigma and embarrassment to individuals but, at the same time, to fulfill its statutory obligation to keep the public informed with specifics necessary to give credibility to the S.C.I.'s findings and recommendations.

The Commission emphasizes that indictments which may result from referral of matters to other agencies are not the only test of the efficacy of its public actions. Even more important are the corrective legislative and regulatory actions spurred by arousing public and legislative interest. The Commission takes particular pride in all such actions which have resulted in improved governmental operations and laws.
MEMBERS OF THE COMMISSION

ORGANIZED CRIME PROGRAM

LABOR RELATIONS PROFITEERING BY ORGANIZED CRIME IN HOUSING CONSTRUCTION

I. General Introduction

The Commission on December 12, 1979, adopted a resolution authorizing an investigation into:

Whether the laws of the State of New Jersey are being faithfully executed and effectively enforced with particular reference to the infiltration of organized crime into the construction of residential and commercial projects in the State of New Jersey; and whether, and to what extent, unions involved in the construction of said projects have been infiltrated or affected by organized crime.

The Commission acted after its staff evaluated reports of possible organized crime activities in the handling of labor relations at certain housing projects. The S.C.I.'s subsequent investigation demonstrated that such incursion into the recruitment of labor and contractors at these projects did occur and was largely attributable to an organized crime network of labor agents that originated in the era of mass housing construction after World War II. The activities of these agents coincided with the emergence of huge housing developments as an economically feasible response to the post-war housing shortage in the New York-New Jersey region.

The prospect of substantial profits from a large-scale easing of an urgent social problem was appropriately attractive to financially resourceful builders—a profit potential that also stimulated the typical greed of organized crime elements for a share of the pot. Further, the promise of expanded employment appealed to labor unions with both a direct and indirect stake in the prosperity of the construction industry—a promise that organized crime members and associates with ties to certain unions typically converted into a profiteering opportunity. This exploitation was engineered by so-called labor relations consultants who for almost two decades were controlled by the Brooklyn-based organized crime family of Carlo Gambino, now deceased. As mass housing construction accelerated, New Jersey began to attract numerous developers whose success depended on preventing multi-million-dollar construction budgets from being crushed by unexpected costs. At the same time trade union workers and leaders, stirred by the publicity about these projects' job opportunities, soon tested New Jersey's long tradition of open shop or nonunion employment in the residential construction field. As a result of increased residential construction in New Jersey, labor consultants beholden to another organized crime family, that of the New Jersey-based Simone Risso (Sam the Plumber) DeCavalcante, became active during the late 1960s and early 1970s. Despite considerable public exposure by the press and by federal and state investigations and prosecutions, particularly between 1976 and 1978, organized crime-influenced labor consultants maintained a continuity of labor relations profiteering for at least 30 years.

Although mob-influenced labor consultancy was evident at some housing projects in 1979 and 1980, the practice has since declined. This decline has been attributed to both a curtailment of residential construction caused by the recession and to the S.C.I.L's investigation. Nonetheless, because of the virulence of labor agent's organized crime heritage, the Commission is convinced that the practice may only be temporarily muted and that the threat of a resurgence persists. The Commission will continue its surveillance in this area and, in the meantime, submits this report of its findings as background for appropriate legislative reforms.

II. Organized Crime in Labor Relations

INTRODUCTION

During the past 30 years various organized crime-associated individuals were active in labor relations consultancy at housing projects. Because of periodic but interrelated transitions from one consultancy to another, the Commission decided that a chronological narrative would best serve the informational and educational purposes of this review. For further clarity, the chronology is divided into two parts—Part 1 dealing with activities of consultants beholden to the Gambino organized crime family during the 1960s and 1970s and Part 2 focusing on DeCavalcante organized crime family influences from 1969 to the present.

PART I—GAMBINO CRIME FAMILY CONSULTANTS

At the outset, as noted, Carlo Gambino, who ruled an army of organized crime family underlings in the New York metropolitan area, was the behind-the-scenes kingpin of labor relations profiteering at mass housing sites. Two Gambino associates appear first in this report—Henry (Harry the Horse) Saltstein and Anthony Palmeri, who used the alias of Tony Grandas.

Saltstein, whose criminal record included convictions for burglary and bookmaking and indictments for forgery and grand larceny, became active as a labor relations profiteer in the early 1950s. By 1952 he had become a labor agent for Levitt & Sons, Inc., the nation's first producer of huge single-family housing tracks, ostensibly to shield the Levitt projects from labor union disruptions. In 1954, when Saltstein incorporated the firm of SGS Associates in New York, Levitt continued its relationship with Saltstein through SGS.

That SGS Associates was merely a corporate facade for organized crime's labor relations profiteering was demonstrated by the inclusion of Gambino as a listed partner within eight months after its incorporation. Despite its Gambino affiliation, SGS survived numerous legislative or criminal investigations until April, 1965, when the New York Times exposed its labor relations connections with a prominent real estate company, several metropolitan hospitals, a number of national brand-name purveyors of men's clothing, an upstate New York resort hotel, as well as with Levitt, "most of whose massive building operations have been with nonunion labor." The New York Times article also noted in part:

"William Levitt, the builder, said through a spokesman: 'We learned about a month ago that the 'G' in the firm name was Carlo Gambino. We have since been informed that Mr. Gambino will sever his relationship in the very near future.'"

"Mr. Levitt, one of the best paying customers of S.G.S., has been dealing with Saltstein since 1952 and reportedly is paying $7,000 a month. Mr. Levitt once said in an interview: 'I'm not against unions. I just think we can build houses faster without them.'"

Saltstein quickly announced that SGS Associates had been dissolved as of April 30, 1965, "because the bad publicity wasn't good for our business." He told The Times that he alone would continue SGS's business activities.
Tony Grande, who long had been associated with Saltzstein as a Gambino mob contact, remained Saltzstein’s pipeline to Gambino after the organized crime boss withdrew from SGS. During an interview by S.C.I. agents, Grande recalled a friendship with Gambino that dated back to the days when he taught Gambino to speak English. Although Grande denied knowing Gambino as a member of organized crime and said he himself knew nothing about organized crime, “made men” or the “syndicate,” such statements were belied by the FBI’s tape recording of DeCavalcante’s converses. (1964 and 1965 which include references to Grande as a Gambino henchman. Grande also denied to the S.C.I. any connection with SGS. However, the Commission was advised by various law enforcement authorities that Grande frequently discussed SGS contracts with Gambino and was observed at the SGS office and at meetings with Gambino and Saltzstein. Grande eventually took over Saltzstein’s labor consultancy accounts after Saltzstein became ill and retired in the late 1960s. By 1970 Grande had become part of a new labor relations company, Lab-ReI Consultants, Inc. This company was formed by a Monmouth County plumber, Ed Lubrano, to co-opt his association with Gambino’s trusted friend Grande. Lubrano later became an informant for law enforcement agencies, including the S.C.I.

Levitt & Sons (1950s-1970s)

Ernest Hurwitz of Montclair, a Levitt employee from 1962 to 1967, became the company’s New York-New Jersey regional manager in 1964. Despite his rise to an important executive post with this mass housing builder, Hurwitz during his testimony at the S.C.I. could not recall when or how he came to know that Saltzstein and SGS were employed by Levitt. He claimed he never discussed labor problems with Saltzstein and that his only meetings with him were of a casual nature, “like in the hallway or something.” Even Hurwitz’s understanding of Saltzstein’s functions, he testified, was an assumption based on hearsay:

Q. Do you know—could you tell us why it was that Levitt hired Saltzstein as a labor relations consultant?

A. Well, I would only assume that because Levitt hired a tremendous amount of manpower through contractors. These were—those men were very susceptible to becoming unionized and Levitt’s contractors worked these men on a piecework basis, and I think years before when they were building Levittown, Pennsylvania, that there had been some picket lines set up. I don’t know if Saltzstein was part of the firm at that time, but there was some kind of a problem during sales or something like that and that’s just hearsay.

Hurwitz at one point in his S.C.I. testimony remembered that he once asked Saltzstein about his labor relations work but was rebuffed:

Q. Do you know how it was that Saltzstein was able to keep the projects nonunion? Do you know what he did in order to maintain it nonunion?

A. No, no. I had no knowledge, and I had asked him, but he said that was his business.

Although Hurwitz indicated he did not know how long Levitt used labor relations consultants after he left the company in 1967, the Commission learned that the practice continued at least until 1971. One witness, plumber Ed Lubrano, recalled that by 1969, after Saltzstein retired, he had started Lab-ReI Consultants in partnership with Saltzstein’s associate Grande and that Lab-ReI acquired Saltzstein’s labor relations accounts, including Levitt. The Commission confirmed that Levitt paid Lab-ReI through the New York law firm of Mirken, Barre and Saltzstein (this Saltzstein was Harry Saltzstein’s son, Robert) more than $54,000 between January, 1970 and March, 1971, a time period which coincides with the duration of Lab-ReI’s existence. Lubrano testified at the S.C.I. about Levitt’s payment procedures:

Commissioner Francis: When they were monthly payments, would they be like progress payments?

The Witness: Well, Levitt, for example, which was a monthly payment, came through an attorney’s office and then to us. It is in the books. I think you have them here.

Commissioner Francis: Did you ever submit requisitions or would your figures ever include requisitions?

The Witness: They didn’t have to be. They would just mail that check in clockwise. The check was always there by the end of the month. I didn’t have to bill Levitt.
Rossmoor's employment of plumber Ed Lubrano as a subcontractor prior to the strike coincidentally led to the corporation's hiring of Saltzstein and Grande as its Leisure World labor consultants. Lubrano recalled in testimony at the S.C.I. that he found himself facing financial difficulties when the picket line halted work at Leisure World. He sought the advice of a New York contractor, Ben Okin, who had long been his principal plumbing materials supplier. Lubrano and Okin shared another bond: Both had ties to organized crime—Lubrano with the seashore racketeers boss Anthony (Little Pussy) Russo of Long Branch and Okin with associates of Gambino in Brooklyn. As a result of Okin's intervention, Lubrano met Saltzstein and Grande and they asked him to arrange for their employment by Rossmoor. Lubrano told the S.C.I. that he thus became Saltzstein's and Grande's "leading lady" at Leisure World. Rossmoor subsequently hired Saltzstein and Grande as labor consultants and soon afterward, on June 11, 1965, an agreement was reached on a collective bargaining contract and the picket line was withdrawn.

Rossmoor's labor consultants Saltzstein and Grande then helped to negotiate contractual concessions that the corporation wanted from the Middlesex trade unions. For example, Harry F. Wilson, who was Rossmoor's project manager in 1965, told the S.C.I. he first met Saltzstein and Grande at a plumbers' union local meeting in August of that year. Wilson testified that the union agreed to let management decide how many foremen were hired organized crime associates to handle labor relations, the testimony went as follows:

Q. You had no indication whatsoever that Saltzstein and Grande were connected to the mob? A. Well, you could assume that they did, yes. But I'm not going to say the mob because I don't know what you mean by "the mob."

Commissioner Patterson: Well, you assumed that they were apparently something other than just labor consultants?

The Witness: Correct sir.

Commissioner Patterson: What did you assume they were?
LeVitt had used labor consultants as a regular practice and others admitted that Saltzstein and Grande were the consultants, no one would take responsibility or identify who was responsible for hiring them. Rossmoor officials also had only vague recollections that a Senior Hurwitz, associated labor influence of these Gambino associates.

Saltzstein left Rossmoor for State College by September of 1967, however, Rossmoor resumed official dealings with him. Although some officials acknowledged only that Rossmoor ceased all construction under its own name at Leisure World by September of 1967. However, Rossmoor resumed housing activity in New Jersey at a later time but under different corporate auspices in which it retained a hidden interest—a device that nullified the Rossmoor-Middletown building trades compact and enabled other construction projects to be launched under the protection of sweetheart contracts negotiated with a sub-contracted union. Meanwhile, Saltzstein and Grande sold their labor relations services to other housing builders in New Jersey.

Boise-Cascade Building Co. (1967-1972)

Soon after Boise-Cascade Building Co. began its mass housing construction projects in New Jersey in the Fall of 1967, it retained Saltzstein and Grande to keep its operations nonunion. A significant circumstance of Saltzstein's and Grande's new labor relations assignment was the previous employment of three Boise-Cascade officials by the Levitt company when it was capitalizing on the labor influence of these Gambino associates. It was not difficult for such corporate officers, whose careers depended on the success of Boise-Cascade's housing endeavor, to assume that a practice Levitt had found to be worthwhile would also inure to Boise-Cascade's benefit. One of the three former Levitt employees was Ernest Hurwitz, who activated Boise-Cascade's New Jersey housing program with a project called Mill Lake Manor in Spotswood in Middlesex County. When Hurwitz began negotiating with Saltzstein and Grande, Saltzstein initially demanded cash payments for his labor consultancy. Hurwitz's testimony at the S.C.I. included this exchange:

Q. Did you ever discuss with Harry Saltzstein the fact that these payments would be made in cash with the purpose of avoiding paying taxes on it and the fact it would amount to a crime?
A. No, I didn't discuss that at all with Saltzstein.

Records of the transactions with Saltzstein indicated that the final arrangements called for fees of $80 per house and a $1,000 retainer. Although Saltzstein received payments from February, 1969, until March, 1970, he submitted only one invoice, for $750. During that period Saltzstein received $14,942 for the homes erected at Mill Lake Manor and another $32,500 for the units built at Boise-Cascade's Lakewood project, A Country Place, for a total of $18,402.

Hurwitz testified at the S.C.I. about Saltzstein's function on behalf of Boise-Cascade:

Q. So, essentially, then, Saltzstein was supposed to maintain your company in a nonunion status.
A. Yes.

Q. For as long as possible.
A. Yes.

When Saltzstein suffered a stroke, Grande assumed his role as Boise-Cascade's labor consultant. Hurwitz recalled that he nonetheless continued to pay Saltzstein. However, just prior to Hurwitz's departure from Boise-Cascade in 1970, there was a more substantive change in the Saltzstein-Grande operation. Hurwitz was notified that all labor relations activities would be handled by Lab-Bel Consultants, Inc., and that this company consisted of Grande and Labrano. Hurwitz already knew Labrano because he had hired him as a Boise-Cascade plumbing subcontractor at Saltzstein's and Grande's request. According to Labrano, when Lab-Bel was dissolved in 1971 after the FBI began investigating his and Grande's activities, the labor relations fees were incorporated into Labrano's plumbing contracts either through fictitious invoices or by adding an extra payment on the contracts. Labrano insisted in his S.C.I. testimony that this revised procedure was approved by Boise-Cascade. Payments totaling more than $20,000... were paid to Lab-Rel until early 1971, when the Boise-Cascade contract with the Grande-Labrano firm was cancelled.

John Hopkins of Bay Head, who was part of a new managerial staff Boise-Cascade assigned to New Jersey in 1971, testified at the S.C.I. that Labrano was a labor consultant on all three of Boise-Cascade's New Jersey projects and a plumbing subcontractor on two of them. Hopkins' testimony indicated that the organized crime background of the corporation's labor consultants was no secret in corporate circles:

Q. Going back to what these various people in the company told you about these labor relations contracts, did each of them tell you specifically it was their opinion these were legitimate labor relations contracts?
A. I don't want to say what they—what I think they thought. They told me we were not the only ones doing it, but Kaufman and Broad had a similar contract and Levitt had a similar contract and all of the builders in the state of New Jersey.

Q. Did they describe to you what the nature of the services provided under this labor relations contract were?
A. To the best of my recollection, it was that it kept us from being bothered by the unions.

Q. Did they explain to you how this service functioned, how it was that this contract could keep you from being bothered by the unions?
A. That the people involved were well connected with the unions and through this payment of money to them, they acted on our behalf if the unions intended to organize us. They could intercede on our behalf and they were knowledgeable in the labor relations field.

Q. Did Paul Burgess, Gene Fishkind or Desrae Patterman or anyone else at Boise-Cascade indicate to you that the connections that Labrano had and his partner Grande had had something to do with the Mafia, with the mob connections that they might have had?
A. Yes.

Q. What did they tell you?
A. They indicated they were connected with one of the (organized crime) families.

Hopkins had known Labrano for a year before he met the plumber's partner Grande. Labrano arranged a luncheon at Brione's, a known mob meeting place in Brooklyn, specifically for the purpose of introducing Hopkins and Grande. As with other employees of Boise-Cascade and other builders in New Jersey, this was one of several such introductory meetings with Grande at Brione's. It was during these restaurant sessions that Hopkins grew to fear Grande. In fact, Labrano testified later in Federal Court that builders left Brione's "soaking wet" with sweat.

In the Spring of 1971, the parent corporation of the Boise-Cascade Building Company decided that residential construction in New Jersey was too costly and that it should sell out. By the end of 1973 Boise-Cascade was in the process of selling its last holdings.

Kayfman & Broad Homes, Inc. (1969-1973)

By the time Kayfman & Broad Homes, Inc., began housing construction in New Jersey in 1969, Saltzstein had retired to Florida. As a result, when Kayfman & Broad officials were told a labor consultant would be needed, they turned to Labrano's and Grande's Lab-Rel company. The transactions that followed led to federal indictments of Grande and Labrano in 1977 for various extortion and labor racketeering conspiracies against Kayfman & Broad "in return for protection from labor difficulties at construction projects.

Labrano pled guilty and agreed to cooperate with the Government against Grande and others. When he entered his plea, Labrano described in Federal Court how he and Grande operated:

'The Court: . . . Tell me exactly what you did, who you did it with, and what happened.

A. Well, sir, I had a plumbing corporation company. I was a plumber in the plumbing business performing contracts. I met Mr. Palumeri, Mr. Grande at the time. I never knew him as Mr. Palumeri. I was offered a good piece of money to collect for labor protection from unions from different things, job stoppages and whatnot on the jobs. At the time I was pretty well out of funds. I just came off of bankruptcy, starting back in business, and it intrigued me. We did collect money without a doubt for the labor protection.

Q. Tell me in more detail how you went about this, how the money was obtained and how the people were induced to pay it, etc.
A. I spoke to the people. I told them that they would be protected in every way, shape or form as far as stoppages or union interfering or whatnot on the jobs, which they knew about and we were talking about. For that, they paid me fifty dollars a house, which I collected either—

Q. Who paid?
A. Kaufman, Broad, Boise, many people. I collected this money into my company and then I got it out in cash or many other ways.

Q. You got fifty dollars a house, and did you share fifty dollars a house with Palimeri?
A. I shared twenty-five dollars with Mr. Palimeri and twenty-five dollars I kept in the business.

Q. In other words, were any of these victims threatened with labor unrest or labor difficulties, or threatened with any untoward event of any kind, if they didn't pay the money?
A. At different times, yes, sir. I did threaten them that payments were slow or not timely.

Q. How did you and Mr. Palimeri get the clout to effectuate these threats? What was there about you two that would make people pay you money?
A. Nothing about me, sir. But Mr. Palimeri was known to have clout for many, many years. He was a contact with big people and people knew about it.

Q. And then the mere mention of his name induced these people to come across with the money?
A. That's all it took...
Q. You knew that was wrong?

A. I knew, yes, I did. I am sorry, your Honor, I made a terrible mistake. I got myself—I got myself convicted for life.

On June 16, 1977, Grande received a three-year prison sentence on each of two counts, the terms to be served concurrently, and a $5,000 fine. On July 12, 1977, Lubrano appeared for sentencing and received the same custodial term and fine as Grande. Lubrano cooperated with the S.C.I. while he was in custody and after his release.

PART 2—DeCavalcante Crime Family Consultants

When Saltzstein and Grande were utilizing Gambino’s underworld power at New Jersey housing sites, their activities constituted an extension of New York-based labor consultancy services primarily for New York and other clients who had no New Jersey origins. Because of the “respect” that harmonized the dealings of crime bosses with adjoining but sometimes overlapping jurisdictions, no crime family conflicts developed between Gambino in New York and DeCavalcante in New Jersey. By 1968, however, DeCavalcante’s crime family members and associates emerged as a separate source of influence over labor relations at certain housing sites. An apparent factor in this transition was the decision by some out-of-state builders to establish New Jersey companies and subsidiaries to initiate new projects or to expand existing projects in this state. Although such corporate actions sometimes were legal fictions masking continued control by the parent corporation, they nonetheless reduced DeCavalcante’s deference to Gambino.

The increasing influence of DeCavalcante’s associates in labor relations profiteering was marked at the outset by their use of the Warehouse and Industrial Federation’s Union Local 242. Although this so-called “paper local” boasted a legal charter, little else justified its existence since it maintained no stable membership rolls or dues collection procedures. Its primary function was to provide labor and other services for mob-controlled companies.

The Commission’s inquiry indicated that Grande orchestrated the use of a Local 242 as a labor relations guise with Joseph (Whitey) Danzo, then of Piscataway. Danzo was president of the local in 1969 when Guardian Development Corp. was created with Rossmoor’s assistance to complete the first portion of its Leisure World project. Guardian signed a “collective bargaining” agreement with Local 242 to avoid being subjected to a Middlesex Trades Council labor contract such as Rossmoor had been forced to sign. Danzo’s Local 242 subordinate was another organized crime associate, Frank (Tiger) LaVecchia. According to Lubrano, LaVecchia was to Danzo what Lubrano had been to Grande—at the outset a friend, an errand boy, a chauffeur and a labor confederate, and later a deal-maker capable of mob-type labor consulting in his own right.

Danzo’s underworld credentials included personal family ties of considerable organized crime repute. He was a cousin of Frank Celano, a member of the Geneovese crime family, and was connected to the Colombo crime family by his daughter’s marriage to the aince-deceased Salvatore (Fat Sal) Profaci, Jr., a real estate salesman who was the nephew of crime boss Joseph Profaci. Danzo’s son-in-law was a cousin of Joseph Profaci’s son, also named Salvatore Profaci, a resident of Holmdel and a publicly identified member of organized crime. When Danzo moved to New Jersey from New York in the 1950s, he and DeCavalcante instituted various labor racketeering schemes, including the utilization of Local 242 for negotiating sweetheart contracts whereby certain employers—including mobsters—benefitted at the expense of working men and women.

LaVecchia’s organized crime links are confirmed not only by the DeCavalcante wiretap transcripts but also by other law enforcement intelligence sources available to the S.C.I. LaVecchia became Danzo’s friend in the late 1950s when he ran a bookmaking operation in Union County. LaVecchia became a business agent for Danzo’s Local 242 in 1969.

Rossmoor and Local 242

Lubrano told the S.C.I. that Rossmoor’s president Ross Cortese continued to construct Leisure World for 18 months after signing the 1965 Middlesex Trade Unions’ agreement but that “it was rough all the way.” When Rossmoor finally decided to sell out, he said, it was persuaded by Grande to use Danzo’s Local 242 to break the Trade Union Council’s contractual grip on Leisure World. Lubrano testified:

Q. And what happened eighteen months later?

A. Eighteen months later, this Cortese was told at some meetings—I was told directly by Mr. Grande what was happening. They shut the job down, let it cool off for a year and come back nonunion. He had given them what they promised and now he could come back as a small housing job, one section at a time and get away from that publicity.

Q. And, therefore, wished to get the unions out of his operations?
A. Out of his operation.

Q. How was that arrangement reached?
A. Well, there was a meeting between Tony Grande, myself, and Whitey Danzo, who owns that local.

Q. What was discussed?
A. That Whitey, which is Mr. Danzo, would proceed to take over the labor relations end of it, and we would completely back out and disappear and one-third of the fee would come to New York.

Q. You said that Oortese later came back doing business under another name?
A. He had formulated Guardian Development. He put Aaron Cross to represent it and Mr. Grande told me Cross had bought Forsgate Country Club from Oortese.

Q. Was there a formal executed document?
A. The fact that he had his charter. If you learn the union setups, once you got a good local and a charter to operate, the charter has to be respected.

Q. In other words, the other union, the other internationals, would respect the fact that Danzo was the union's representative for a certain group of employees and they would not invade his territory?
A. Right.

Q. Who else was present besides the three of you?
A. Tiger LaVecchia at one time. That's Whitey's man. Also, a couple of the building trades, the general people that were affected here and there. They were told the job was going to quiet down.

Rossmoor and Guardian Development Corp.

On October 24, 1968, an agreement was reached by Rossmoor to sell the Village One section of its Leisure World Project at the New York law office of Solomon Eisenrod. The sale, it was agreed, would be made to a new corporation, Guardian Development, with Eisenrod as board chairman, and owner of almost two-thirds of its stock, and with Rossmoor employees Cooper and Aaron Cross splitting most of the remaining stock as president and vice president respectively. A sequence of complex transactions ensued that, according to the S.C.I.'s review of pertinent documents, was designed to hide the actual ownership by Rossmoor of a one-third interest in Guardian Development. This conclusion was supported by testimony at the S.C.I. of Cooper, who had been Rossmoor's Leisure World manager. Cooper testified in part:

CHAIRMAN LANN: Rossmoor allowed you to go into this arrangement according to your testimony, without any risk at all on your part except your time and they had nothing to gain?

THE WITNESS: Sure, they did. They were going to own the stock, which they ultimately did wind up with the stock. But that's true. I was allowed to get into it with nothing except my expertise, which I consider worth a lot of money.

Q. In other words, you were simply a middleman between the Rossmoor Corporation in California and the Guardian Corporation in New Jersey?
A. I don't know if I like the use of the word "middleman." You know, I don't know what that means.

Q. How about if we use the word "straw-man"?
A. That doesn't suit it either.

Q. That is commonly—if your name is on the stock but it's their investment, do you understand that to be a straw-man situation?
A. Use the term you want to. To me, it's not important.

Cooper confirmed that Rossmoor's interest in Guardian was concealed not only to prevent any continuing burden of Rossmoor's 1965 agreement with the trade unions but also to pave the way for the Guardian to contract with Danzo's Local 242, thereby barring AFL-CIO unions from negotiating a new agreement. Cooper's testimony demonstrated that the Local 242 contract gave Guardian the appearance of operating a unionized project. As a result, whenever a business agent from a Trades Council union visited him, Cooper testified he could say he "was signed with 242 and . . . they left me alone."

Although Gambino's man, Grande, was supposed to have ceased his labor relations activities for Rossmoor when it discontinued construction at Leisure World in 1967, his reappearance at the project as Rossmoor was selling it and his labor relations work with Lubrano were described to the Commission by Lubrano and Cooper and corroborated by the S.C.I.'s own investigative findings.

Rossmoor and Aaron Cross Construction Co.

In February, 1971, the Rossmoor Corp. created Aaron Cross Construction and transferred to it a 620-acre piece of its Leisure World project. Cross Construction was even more dominated by Rossmoor than Guardian Development had been and for the same reasons: To assure that its 1965 collective bargaining agreement, or labor relations activities for Rossmoor was 242 and to enable the construction of its Leisure World to also negotiate a self-serving labor agreement with Local 242.

Rossmoor's control of Cross Construction is demonstrated by the manner in which it was created and administered. Cross, who had worked for Rossmoor since 1952, began looking for other employment while he was acting for Rossmoor as vice president of Guardian Development. Rossmoor's Ross Cortese suggested that Cross complete the development of Leisure World, according to Cross's testimony, by which he could draw an annual salary of $35,000. Rossmoor drafted the option agreement transferring Leisure World acreage to Cross and the site plan for its development. Rossmoor's control of Cross Construction was confirmed by Cross in his S.C.I. testimony:

Q. Is it a fair statement to say Rossmoor owned the land, financed the construction and had complete control of the project and actually hired Aaron Cross Construction as the general contractor on the job?
A. Yes.

Q. And you were answerable to the dictates of Rossmoor?
A. Oh, sure.

Aaron Cross Construction Co. and Local 242

Aaron Cross first met Local 242's Danzo and LaVecchia while he was vice president of Guardian. As a result, when Cross Construction Co. was formed, Cross asked Danzo if he would also handle labor relations at Cross' Clearbrook project. Cross testified at the S.C.I. about his new connection with Local 242:

Q. When you formed your own company known as Aaron Cross Construction Company, did you also take the same steps of signing a contract with 242?
A. Well, not as such. When Ross offered me—and if I could get something going with it and I just saw Joe on a daily or whatever two-day basis, I asked him if he was going to handle the labor over in 242 for me, too, and he said, yes. In other words, we didn't have a meeting and sit down and have the agreement and hash over an agreement or anything like that.

Q. Well, you asked Joe to take the labor over in 242?
A. Correct.

Q. And he agreed to do so. Correct?
A. Yes.

Q. And by reaching that agreement, you received the same benefits that Jim Cooper had received at Guardian. Correct?
A. Correct.

The Local 242 "Umbrella"

As with Guardian, Cross Construction could operate on a non-union or open-shop basis, ignore the various trade unions in seeking competitive bids from subcontractors and award the contracts to the subcontractors who employed nonunion workers. Cross testified that the Local 242 contract served as an "umbrella" sanctioned by federal labor law against the trade unions:
Q. The question really is: What makes, in your opinion, 343 so much more effective for the contractor's purposes than the building trades?
A. Because you are hiring qualified—you were hiring qualified subcontractors. Either they were already members of Local 242 or you put them in Local 242.

Q. What you're really saying, then, I guess, is that under 343 you could select, in effect, the workmen first and then put them into the union?
A. In other words, like when I was supplying the job—what you're saying is absolutely correct.

Q. Under the building trades, you had to accept whatever workers were sent to you from the building trades?
A. Yeah, generally speaking. Doesn't work exactly like that, but that's close enough.

Q. Is it fair to say that signing a contract with 343 really had the sole purpose of keeping the Building Trades Council off your back? Isn't that what you meant by using the umbrella provision of the Taft-Hartley Act?
A. That's correct.

Background of Local 242

In an effort to determine the validity of statements by various labor union witnesses that Local 242 was a sham union designed only to benefit employers at the expense of workers, the Commission questioned Kenneth Friedman of Merrick, N. Y., under a grant of immunity. Friedman was a top labor union witness that Local 242 was a sham union designed only to benefit employers at the expense of workers, the Guardian's project and at Cross' Clearbrook. He testified that no union shop stewards serviced their contracts, that no one settled grievances, that no pension or hospitalization benefits were being paid, that the contracts did not require employer contributions for these purposes, that dues were being received from employers without checkoff authorization cards, among other deficiencies. Friedman said he subsequently "terminated" the Local 242 contracts with Guardian and Cross Construction by registered letters to the companies.

The Payoff to Danzo

Cooper and Cross conceded that their companies received substantial benefits by contracting with Local 242 but denied that Danzo received anything in return. Despite these denials of any payoff, the Commission learned that Danzo in March, 1976, acquired a parcel of more than 31 acres of land from Rossmoor at a price that was $40,000 below its $70,000 market value. Some years later Danzo erected a home on this land at wholesale cost with Guardian's help and other builders and subcontractors helped Danzo develop the tract as a horse farm. The 31-acre plot, part of the original development that Rossmoor had planned in 1965, had been leased to Danzo by Rossmoor four years prior to Danzo's decision to buy it.

Michael Guerriero, the vice president of Cross Construction who also was Rossmoor's agent in selling its remaining landholdings, testified that he did not know how, when or why Danzo undertook the transactions involving the 31 acres he eventually bought for a mere $30,000. Following are excerpts from Guerriero's testimony at the S.C.I.:

Q. Mr. Guerriero, regardless, really, of when Danzo exactly expressed an interest in this property, one thing stands clear: Joe Danzo was your union representative at the time you executed that lease with him. Is that correct?
A. Local 242 was, yes.

Q. And wasn't Joe Danzo the union representative from Local 242?
A. I believe so.

Q. Did you ever perceive that to be a conflict of interest of any sort?
A. No.
Between the time Danzo signed the lease-option agreement in 1973 and bought the farm in 1976, about $75,000 worth of improvements were made on the parcel, including a half-mile race track, a stable with 38 stalls and attached offices, a rail fence along the entire perimeter, as well as curbing, road widening and sewer lines. The Commission's review of Danzo's financial records disclosed expenditures of only $12,000 by him on the horse farm between 1972 and 1978 and corroborated testimony that various Guardian and Cross subcontractors made most of the improvements free of charge or at reduced cost. Samuel A. Smith, operations manager for Guardian since 1971, identified five subcontractors who worked both on Guardian's projects and on Danzo's home. Cooper at first denied and then admitted authorizing invoices for work and materials at Danzo's house to be processed through Guardian. He testified that he was willing to do a favor in return for a favor—the favor in this case being the Local 242 contract.

Danzo and LaVecchia as Labor Consultants (1973-1977)

Danzo and LaVecchia abandoned Local 242 as a labor relations mechanism in 1971-72 and began to be retained as a team operating through a LaVecchia company known as Relative Land Associates, although they also used other similarly named companies for the receipt of fees. Danzo was regarded as LaVecchia's superior, even generally shared their fees until 1984. Danzo was removed.

The first client of Danzo and LaVecchia as individual labor consultants was the Texas-based Lincoln Property Co., in May, 1972.

Lincoln Property Co. at Princeton Meadows

Aaron Cross, whose Cross Construction Co.'s Clearbrook project led Danzo and LaVecchia to Lincoln Property Co.'s Princeton Operating Engineers Local 825 established a picket line at the site the next month. This contact was arranged when Princeton Meadows was still operating under its "sweetheart" contract with Local 242, as Cross had already had a Local 242 contract. By 1975, Cross Construction had expanded its operations to a project in Evesham Township (Burlington County) called New World. When Cross asked Danzo and LaVecchia to extend the Local 242 contract at Clearbrook to cover the Evesham project, they advised him that they could receive the same services Local 242 had provided by hiring them individually as labor consultants. Cross did so on March 7, 1973, and paid them through Relative Land Associates almost $50,000 over the next twelve months. (The New World project at Evesham was actually owned by the Rossmoor Corp.)
Dover Heights and Village Harbour

Having extended their labor consultancy business into South Jersey, Danzo and LaVecchia began seeking additional consultancy work in that part of the state. One of their tactics in this expansion was to confront builders with actual or threatened work stoppages and then promote their availability as problem solvers. They promoted this role first at the Dover Heights project in Dover Township (Ocean County). The Dover Heights scheme failed to produce a payoff to Danzo and LaVecchia but it set a pattern for a more remunerative deal at Village Harbour, the Lincoln Property Co.'s project in Manahawkin, also in Ocean County.

The Dover Heights project, originally known as Cadillac Heights, was purchased and renamed by Joshua A. Popkin in 1972. Popkin told the New Jersey State Police and later the S.C.I. landscape contractor Salvatore (Sum) Scarpulla, who was seeking work. As part of his sales pitch, Scarpulla said if he got the Dover Heights landscaping contract the project would not have Scarpulla in mind. A day or two after Christmas Scarpulla again visited the project, this time with James P. Patterson, a representative and Patterson told Popkin that he must sign a union contract or project would not have Scarpulla in mind. According to Patterson’s personal diary, the S.C.I. established that this both landscaper Scarpulla and labor consultant LaVecchia in an attempt to intimidate Popkin.

The Village Harbour project, originally called Shelter Bay, was acquired and renamed by Lincoln Property in March, 1973. Jay C. S.C.I. established the same Carpenters Local 1107 agent maintained a constant liaison with Patterson testified at the S.C.I. that he called LaVecchia, whose name he knew because his superior, Eric Eiebler, had told him LaVecchia had solved labor problems at Lincoln Property's Princeton Meadows project. Cranner asked LaVecchia to talk to the pickets or their leaders. According to Patterson’s diary, the picket line was removed May 22, the day that Patterson attended a meeting with Lincoln Property's construction manager and LaVecchia at the project. It was a coincidence that LaVecchia attended this meeting. The day before the pickets disappeared, Cranner made his first labor consultant's payment of $15,000 to LaVecchia at Village Harbour.

Patterson contended in his S.C.I. testimony that he did not realize LaVecchia was prompting him to create labor strife at housing projects only so LaVecchia could be hired as a labor consultant who could “settle” such problems. Looking back, Patterson conceded, LaVecchia's ploys made him feel “kind of ridiculous:

Q. My question is was LaVecchia working both sides of the fence?
A. Well, evidently from what I know now he was, but I didn’t at that time.

The CHAIRMAN: I understood it was well settled on this record that the time he was encouraging you to put up picket lines you knew he was a labor consultant for the contractor or management on the job?

The WITNESS: Right.

Q. The Chairman’s question was whether LaVecchia was using you to make himself look good in the contractors eyes?
A. He must have been.

Q. How does that make you feel?
A. Now, kind of ridiculous.

On April 1, 1974 Lincoln Property issued a second Village Harbour check for $15,000 payable to Danzo’s and LaVecchia’s Relative Land consultancy business. LaVecchia got $7,500 from Village Harbour in 1975 and that project in 1977 paid Danzo $15,000, two-thirds of which was for services at the company’s Green Tree project launch that same year in the Marlton section of Evesham Township. In all, payments to this corporate front and/or to Danzo and LaVecchia for labor relations work at Village Harbour ultimately amounted to $103,000.
Investigation and Trial of LaVecchia et al (1975)

Robert Eugene Johnson, a fill-dirt and grading subcontractor, who had worked on Danzo's farm but wasn't paid, was a subcontractor at Lincoln Property's Village Harbour project. Johnson subsequently was introduced by LaVecchia to two officials of Operating Engineers Local 825, Pat Hagen and Pat Merola. Events that followed that introduction led to state grand jury conspiracy indictments in 1975 of LaVecchia, Hagen and Merola on bribery and extortion charges to guarantee labor peace at Johnson's jobs. The allegations were brought to trial in 1975. Hagen and Merola were convicted and LaVecchia was acquitted.

Mob Feud Over a Subcontractor (1977)

Randy Scarborough of the Scarborough corporation in Cherry Hill told the S.C.I. that his company utilized LaVecchia as a Monmouth County union shop. In 1972, Scarborough said LaVecchia's contractors. Warren Mack, who worked for Scarborough from 1972 to 1974, was its Weybridge project manager in 1972. He testified that least two subcontractors who subsequently worked at Weybridge were those who worked at Weybridge. The topic of an organized crime meeting which Mack attended was LaVecchia's request.

The commission has verified that the meeting was held on August 5, 1977, at the Hightstown Hilton Inn near the New Jersey Turnpike's Exit 8 and was attended by Danzo, LaVecchia and Sal Profaci of Holmdel. Profaci was present as the mediator of an argument between LaVecchia and Robert (Bobby Basile) and Merola, who had an interest in the labor consultant. Frank testified that Danzo had changed the subcontractor on housing project contracts, despite LaVecchia's and Danzo's reccollection of LaVecchia's promotion of JRH at the Weybridge project five years earlier. Mack was summoned to this meeting by LaVecchia and confirmed his utilization of JRH in 1972. Mack's explanation at the Hightstown lunch was LaVecchia's intercession on JRH Electri's behalf convinced Profaci, the mediator, that Oochiopititi's complaints were without basis. He so ruled and that ended the dispute.

By 1975 a decline in Danzo's and LaVecchia's labor relations activities had occurred. The only builder who continued to retain Danzo and LaVecchia during the latter's indictment, trial and acquittal was Lincoln Property Co. However, after LaVecchia was acquitted, he and Danzo began obtaining new clients.

U. S. Home Corp. (1977-1979)

Philip Frank, president of U. S. Home's New Jersey division, told the S.C.I. that all of his company's housing projects were "run nonunion throughout Ocean or Monmouth counties." When U. S. Home expanded into Middlesex County in 1977 with its Princeton Collection project in Plainsboro, Frank testified that reports from other builders of previous problems with the Middlesex trade unions made him uneasy. He said a Lincoln Property Co. project manager with whom he had discussed the labor union situation sent LaVecchia and a companion Frank recalls only as "Joe" to see him. With his company's permission, Frank agreed to pay LaVecchia $15,000 a year as a labor consultant. Frank conceded that he acted without any effort to ascertain the personal or business background of LaVecchia or his friend "Joe," as demonstrated by the following extract of his testimony at the S.C.I.:

Comissioner Patterson: Mr. Frank, it's difficult for me to believe that your national headquarters would so easily approve a fifteen-thousand-dollar a year expenditure when you have had—for a man to help you in union problems should they come up when you had six or seven other projects and had no union problems in those. Some of those projects were in New Jersey. In fact, all but one was in New Jersey, if I recall, and that you had no indication or no evidence that you were going to have any union problems . . . in the Princeton Collection area. It would seem to me, if I were your boss, I would want some concrete evidence, arguments, other than something saying you ought to hire the guy before approving the decision.

The Witness: Well, I related the same thing I just related to you. I told—Several weeks after LaVecchia was hired, he submitted an invoice under the letterhead of Relative Associates on September 26, 1977. A $15,000 check in payment of that invoice was issued by U.S. Home on October 12, 1977. A year later, on September 15, 1978, LaVecchia submitted another Relative Associates invoice for $15,000 as advance payment for another year's services, which the corporation paid immediately. In September, 1979, LaVecchia's 1980 retainer of $15,000 was approved but, since Frank never informed LaVecchia and LaVecchia inexplicably never pressed for a third year's pay-

The Orleans Construction Co. of Huntington Valley, Pa., hired the company acquired an East Brunswick site for a housing project for the Lexington Village project. The Orleans partner responsible S.C.I. that he hired Danzo and LaVecchia—now operating as somebody local who knows the people. We needed somebody who subcontractors were employed to bring in subcontractors who would unions. Orleans testifying on this topic as follows:

Q. What would you like to know is why do you have to hire a labor consultant or how does it affect the company policy for the project?
A. Invariably in the building business you have certain people who know certain people. It's like you some contractors can work in certain areas and sultan when you are new in the area does it you. They can recommend certain contractors that can do a good job for you.

Q. So hire somebody like Danzo and LaVecchia who know which unions are militant in nature and can that union?
A. In general I would say that—run want to know the common practice in an area and by them being local in an area or relatively local in an area.

Testimony about the Orleans company's employment of Danzo and LaVecchia confirmed the Commission's findings that the labor they recommended to a builder. The heating and air conditioning subcontractors who worked for Orleans, for example, performed $35,000 worth of work on Danzo's and LaVecchia's homes. In all, these and other subcontractors provided services totaling $90,000 on a house LaVecchia built in Dover Township in 1979. At the time of the Commission's inquiry into these activities in 1981, none of the subcontractors involved had been paid by LaVecchia. According to testimony at the S.C.I., subcontractors found it important to curry favor with the labor consultants who could recommend them for work at various projects. An air conditioning subcontractor, Marty Indurara, so testified:

"I am a businessman and Danzo and LaVecchia were on these projects as employees of these projects, to my knowledge, and as such they had a certain amount of authority. I looked to them to recommend me; if I could get a lead from them, it was appreciated. It was something I would do for anybody related to a project that could do us a little good."

Having paid $35,000 to D & L Associates for the consulting firm's initial contractual year, Orleans terminated its relationship with Danzo and LaVecchia on July 21, 1980. Although the 1979-80 contract for a second year retainer still had several months to run, the labor agents were paid the full year's fee. According to testimony before the Commission by Edward J. Zoller, the company's Lexington Village project supervisor, the S.C.I.'s investigation of Danzo and LaVecchia was one of the reasons why Orleans so abruptly cancelled the contract.

Landi Corp. (1978-1979)

In September, 1978, the Landi Corp. contacted Danzo and LaVecchia when a labor dispute disrupted work at its Forest Glen apartment project in Highland Park (Middlesex County).

According to Landi president H. Charles (Bud) McNally and project supervisor Harold Fishkin, construction on the project had proceeded smoothly for four months when, without warning, a picket line appeared. Deliveries were held up, construction began to fall behind, and, said both officials, panic was setting in. Fishkin testified that when Landi signed a contract to pay D & L Associates a yearly retainer of $15,000, the pickets disappeared the following day. Neither McNally nor Fishkin ever bothered to find out how this feat was accomplished since, as Fishkin testified, LaVecchia had advised him not to talk to union officials and to leave all negotiations to the labor consultants. Fishkin stated, in part:

They sort of made it clear to us when we went to meet with them that they functioned with the business agents in a manner because of their contacts, because of their union affiliation that most people couldn't and, therefore, that's why we weren't to talk to business agents and maybe upset the apple cart and that they could do things, and they were obviously intentionally being a little vague about exactly who they are going to talk to and what was going to happen, but assured us that because of this background they could do it and I thought it was a bit miraculous that they were able to do it in one day.

Landis paid J & L Associates $10,000 in December, 1978 and $5,000 in October, 1979. The contract was not renewed.

Municipal Building Inspector's Role

In an effort to pinpoint responsibility for the labor problem at Forest Glen that caused Landis to hire Danzo and LaVecchia, the Commission learned that the picket line was initiated by Carpenters Local 1006 and that the president of this local was Anthony (Biochy) Giorgianni, the building inspector for Highland Park where the Forest Glen project was located. Frank Daddio, business agent of Local 1006, testified that he established the picket line at Giorgianni's request. Giorgianni denied any involvement but Landis officials documented demands by him that Forest Glen become a union labor project.

Fishkin left Landis Corp. in July, 1980, to become vice-president for Hills Development Co., which was involved with the Allen Dans housing project in Piscataway (Somerset County). Fishkin told the Commission that in the Fall of 1980 he began receiving calls from an Operating Engineers representative requesting him to hold a pre-job conference with the local trades council in order to maintain its economic viability. A retainer of $50,000 per year for LaVecchia's services was agreed upon but the contract was not to be signed until actual construction began in the Spring of 1981.

During January, 1981, Fishkin was interviewed by S.C.I. agents about his knowledge of Danso and LaVecchia. He told the Commission that ever since the S.C.I. contacted him he had been "agonizing" over the propriety of Danzo's and LaVecchia's activities as labor consultants. Consequently, he said, LaVecchia never was signed by Hills Development Co. to a labor consultancy contract.

The Lincoln Property Co., and its successor company in New Jersey, Linpro, continued to employ labor relations consultants despite widely publicized criminal prosecutions that verified their organized crime backgrounds and their criminal records. Linpro still retains LaVecchia under a contractual facade designed—as this Commission views it—to cloak continuing abuses with an aura of legitimacy. This facade, which includes the substitution of "construction consultant" for "labor consultant" and the stipulation of LaVecchia's required functions and hours of performance, is largely attributable to the S.C.I.'s investigation.

In 1977, the Dallas-based Lincoln Property became two companies when Eichler and various other partners in the Northeast region, from Fairfax, Va., to Boston, established Linpro as an independent offshoot to continue Lincoln Property's New Jersey operations, including the Princeton Meadows, Village Harbor and Greentree projects. Linpro continued the retention of Danzo and LaVecchia and later LaVecchia alone, but only in New Jersey. No other Linpro housing project from Virginia to Massachusetts uses a labor relations consultant.

Since November, 1980, all fees due to Danzo and LaVecchia and then LaVecchia after Danzo's death in 1981 have been made payable by Linpro to the Relative Associates consulting firm. LaVecchia's invoices characterize his company as a "construction consultant" and, apparently reacting to the Commission's inquiries about the lack of definition of labor consultants' hours, duties and work product, LaVecchia otherwise operates under contracts which articulate his specific job functions. For example, Linpro correspondence in November, 1980, confirming the re-engagement of LaVecchia at the Greentree "office project," stated that LaVecchia's services were to include "the evaluation of subcontractors for all phases of construction," and that he was "expected to work directly with" the construction manager in reviewing the bid proposals of subcontractors, inspecting their prior work if necessary and meeting with subcontractors during construction to expedite production. LaVecchia was also informed that "about any labor disputes arise during the course of construction we would expect you to also assist in resolving same." LaVecchia was to receive $6,000 for performing his required functions within four hours per week during an eight-to-ten month period. The Greentree office project contract was not the only contract negotiated in November, 1980. It was "shopping center," LaVecchia would receive an additional $17,500 services. For an estimated seven months of service at Village Harbour, LaVecchia was to receive an additional $10,000.

Linpro's Princeton Meadows division also re-engaged LaVecchia on that project's office building, $45,000 for the next phase of and another $10,000 the project's townhouses. LaVecchia's contractual services at Princeton Meadows were expected to be completed by the end of 1981, except for apartment construction services which were to continue until May, 1982.

Thus, for all Linpro project services from late 1980 to May, 1982, LaVecchia will have been paid a total of $113,000. In 1973, when Danzo and LaVecchia were still working as a team, Linpro paid LaVecchia was first hired by Lincoln Property Co., to May, 1982, with LaVecchia's current Linpro contracts will expire, total labor amounted to approximately $55,000.

LaVecchia Refuses to Answer Questions

As the Commission concluded its inquiry, it questioned LaVecchia at an executive session. The questions put to specifically identified organized crime members and associates, builders and their projects and with labor union officials and labor problems at construction projects. On the advice of his lawyer he under the Fifth Amendment and refused to respond.

III. Recommendations and Conclusions

Following are the Commission's recommendations for proscribing such housing project labor relations practices as reviewed in this report.
Home Corp., the S.C.I. examined inter-office correspondence wherein Philip Frank, division president, after he retained Danzo LaVecchia as labor consultant, was instructed to have talk to any employees of U. S. Home or its subcontractors without the company's written consent. The obvious intent of this agreement was to establish a distinction between persuasion and advice of labor consultants in connection with the U. S. Home's labor management relations. The Commission observed the same device in Harry Saltstein's and Lab-Rel's contracts with Boise-Cascade contained a statement that none of the activities to be performed would entail conduct which would necessitate reporting under the Act.

In order to close this loophole in the statute, the Commission urges that New Jersey's federal legislators sponsor and support Disclosure Act, including the following proposals of the House Subcommittees:

We encourage the Department of Labor to undertake a thorough re-examination of the employer and LMPIA. The growth of the consultant industry is Labor to evaluate the current interpretation of the Act. Virtually every union is required to and does report its activities under the provisions of the Act. It is inequitable that the Department does not require consultants, even in instances when they are clearly running management's anti-union campaign, to disclose their involvement. The Department's current review should encompass interpretative issues in addition to the advice-persuasion distinction. The review must come to terms with the failures of the existing interpretations of the law to realize the Act's purpose of assuring fair and open disclosure of the activities of all people involved in the organizing and the collective bargaining process.

Recommendation #2 (State Reforms)

The Legislature of the State of New Jersey should enact a statute imposing fiduciary duties and responsibilities on labor union representatives, supplemented by a designation of violations as a criminal act, such violations to include any inducement to violate such fiduciary duties and responsibilities. Such a statute should contain a broadening of the federal definition of a registered "labor consultant" and specifically include such consultants within the proscription of inducements to violate a labor union representative's fiduciary obligations.

Comment

Under such a statute, the Commission would require all labor consultants, whether they be persuaders or advisors, to register with the State in order that employers may know who is a registered consultant and who is not. Consistent with the Casino Gambling Control Act and the more recently enacted legislation governing the distribution and sale of cigarettes, registration as a consultant should be denied to anyone who fits the definition of a career criminal offender. Thus business and labor leaders, by checking with a state licensing authority, would be assured of at least a minimum level of integrity for any given consultant. As one California-based labor consultant wrote the Commission: "Government regulations should be imposed on labor relations consultants so that those of us who are endeavoring to do a credible piece of work representing employers can be distinguished from the labor relations consultant (who) appears overnight and stays just long enough to give our profession a poor reputation."

Legislation suggested by the S.C.I. could be patterned after New York State's Labor-Management Improper Practices Act (20A McKinney's Laws § 720 et seq.). This statute establishes a policy that representatives of a union are bound by a fiduciary obligation to their members in handling union assets. The New York statute also provides that a breach of fiduciary duty, including the inducement of that breach, is a criminal act. The New York statute specifically forbids a labor relations consultant from inducing breaches of a fiduciary obligation and defines a labor relations consultant as one who, for compensation, advises or represents an employer or union with regard to employee organizing, concerted activities or collective bargaining activities. The statute requires such consultants to maintain books and records of account for five years and in conformity with generally accepted accounting practices. This statute could be strengthened in its New Jersey application by requiring not only the licensure of labor relations consultants but also by mandating that financial reports detailing the sources, distribution and amount of all income be submitted annually.

Upon the enactment of such remedial legislation, builders and other businesses in the State would have ready access to pertinent information on labor consultants and would be able to make decisions as to their retention. In essence, background checks disclose career criminal offenders from the field and give the business community a sense of confidence in the licensees, a salutary accomplishment.

Organized Crime/1981 Update

Introduction

While winding up its investigation into the background of organized crime involvement in labor relations at housing construction sites, the Commission continued its surveillance of current and former active underworld members and associates. In the meantime, the Commission's confrontation program met with success in federal and state courts during 1981, as noted below.

Nicodemo (Little Nicky) Scarfo

Scarfo of Atlantic City, one of the original subjects of the S.C.I.'s guilty of illegal possession of a handgun in April in Federal Court, Federal Prison and fined $5,000. During a pre-sentence hearing, a judge sentenced him to a maximum of 18 months in jail before finally agreeing to testify before the Commission. He made a number of appearances at the S.C.I. after his release from prison in 1979.

Scarfo was publicly identified by the FBI as head of the S.C.I., and in July was sentenced to a maximum of two years in Federal Prison for refusing to answer questions and served 31 months in jail before finally agreeing to testify before the Commission. He made a number of appearances at the S.C.I. after his release from prison in 1979.

Carl (Pappy) Ippolito

Ippolito's prior conviction and $5,000 fine for refusing to answer questions at the S.C.I. withstood in September an effort by his lawyer to have him judged mentally incompetent during the trial. Ippolito, a cousin of the murdered Bruno, did not attend the hearing before Mercer County Judge Richard J. S. Barlow on the sanity issue. In rejecting the incompetency plea, Judge Barlow noted that Ippolito had answered most questions without difficulty during cross examination at the contempt proceedings that during the investigation that led to Scarfo's murder trial. McGuigan was an investigator for the Atlantic County Prosecutor at the time that coded list was found. It was not until last April, after McGuigan joined the S.C.I. staff, that he finally broke the code and thus identified a number of Scarfo's closest gangland contacts. McGuigan's work was part of a joint effort by a number of law enforcement personnel who cooperated with the Camden office of the U.S. Justice Department's Organized Crime and racketeering Section in the successful prosecution of Scarfo. This team work, including the S.C.I.'s role in it, was praised by Robert C. Stewart, attorney-in-chief, in a letter to the Commission. Mr. Stewart's letter stated:

"I have been informed by our attorney who handled the case that the imposed maximum sentence was the result of a joint effort by several law enforcement agencies, whose contributions clearly demonstrated the effectiveness of collective participation. I would like to express our thanks and gratitude for the cooperation and assistance your office provided, particularly mentioning the contributions of Dennis McGuigan and Michael Stavano (former Executive Director). Without their time and effort, the successful prosecution of Nicodemo Scarfo would certainly not have occurred."

As noted, Scarfo was among the organized crime figures subpoenaed for questioning by the S.C.I. in the early 1970s. He was held in contempt for refusing to answer questions and served 31 months in jail before finally agreeing to testify before the Commission. He made a number of appearances at the S.C.I. after his release from prison in 1979.
resulted in more than 40 pages of trial transcript. The 1981 hearing finally ended a five-year court battle by Ippolito to avoid answering questions at the S.C.I. about his organized crime activities.

Tino Fiumara, John DiGilio

Both Fiumara of Wyckoff and DiGilio of Paramus, who also had been subpoenaed to appear for executive session testimony at the S.C.I., suffered setbacks by the United States Supreme Court in October.

That court refused to review waterfront racketeering convictions of Fiumara, who operated at the Newark and Elizabeth docks, and Michael Clemente of New York and former longshoreman’s local president Vincent Colucci of Hillside.

DiGilio, who had been freed after serving six months of a nine-month sentence for his role in the theft of his personal files from the FBI, unsuccessfully sought a new trial from the U.S. Supreme Court. That court refused to hear an appeal based on DiGilio’s claim that new evidence warranted a retrial of his case. DiGilio was among a number of underworld figures who fled the state in the early 1970s to avoid an S.C.I. subpoena.

Raymond (Long John) Martorano

This longtime ally of the murdered Angelo Bruno was involved in the S.C.I.’s continuing confrontation of organized crime members during 1981. The S.C.I. obtained a bench warrant for his arrest in November after a court hearing in which the Commission demonstrated he was in contempt of a subpoena to appear for questioning. Commission agents executed the S.C.I. warrant at Martorano’s Cherry Hill home in December, after which a Superior Court Judge directed Martorano to appear for questioning at the S.C.I. during 1982.

The Commission also continued during 1981 its surveillance of members of the organized crime family of Samuel Rizzo (Sam the Plumber) DeCavalcante, including John Raggi and Louis Larasso of Linden.

* . . . The conduct of public officers and public employees, and of officers and employees of public corporations and authorities;
* Any matter concerning the public peace, public safety and public justice. . . .

THE COMMISSION'S PUBLIC ACTIVITIES

INTRODUCTION/1981 UPDATE

The Commission's public activities in 1981 included:

- Publication in April of a 360-page Report and Recommendations on the New Jersey Housing Finance Agency (HFA).* A summary of the Commission's proposed reforms at this agency appears on P. 53 of this report.

- Publication in June of the 370-page Report and Recommendations on Organized Crime Infiltration of Dental Care Plan Organizations.*

- Conclusion of an inquiry into the history and impact of organized crime on labor relations at specified housing construction sites. A report, with recommendations, is included in this Annual Report, beginning on P. 9.

Recommendations Against Mob Incursion of Dental Care Plans

The Commission's investigation encompassed numerous dental care plans but ultimately centered on two major operations that most graphically illustrated how questionable profits were being generated by means of intertwining corporate fiscal manipulations, overpriced care programs and facilities and unrecorded and unexplained diversions of cash.

One of these enterprises operated in South Jersey. The Commission's investigators found that, in one year alone, a so-called consulting company generated a cash flow approaching a million dollars from which was diverted more than $150,000 for purposes that could not be specifically identified in any corporate or individual business accounts or by those who handled or otherwise had access to the money. The S.C.L. probe revealed that this fund was shared with individuals identified as associates or members of organized crime.

* Copies of the Commission's full reports on its investigations of the HFA and Dental Care Plans are available at the S.C.L. office.
Another larger enterprise, utilizing more than 20 dental clinics in North Jersey, was found to have significant organized crime connections to Buffalo, N.Y., and Cleveland, Ohio. The inflated invoices in the form of rebates, and other dubious financial transactions wereIssuer to regulate such transactions to strengthen a law requiring the State Insurance Commissioner to regulate dental plan organizations. This law became effective in June, 1980, but had not been materially implemented. The changes proposed by the Commission would require more adequate disclosure and closer inspection of financial transactions of dental plan organizations than is presently required by the statute. These amendments would:

- Regulate "consultants" and "finders who are connected in any way with dental plan organizations, including full disclosure of fees and other compensation pledged or paid. The amounts of such compensation would be subject to regulation by the insurance commissioner.
- Require the commissioner to act within 90 days upon receipt of an application by a dental plan organization for a certificate of authority to operate. Applications submitted prior to the implementation of this revision would have to be acted upon within 90 days of the effective date of this revision.
- Require the submission of financial statements prepared and attested to by an independent certified public accountant showing a dental plan organization's assets, liabilities and sources of financial support. Terms and conditions of liabilities also would be required. Requests to applicants for additional data would require compliance within 30 days.
- Require that actual dental plan provider contracts must be submitted to assure that they conform with the "form" of such contracts previously supplied to the commissioner.

The Commission's recommendations were subsequently incorporated into legislation which is expected to be on the agenda of the 1982-83 Legislature.

STATE LEGISLATIVE LIAISON

Dental Care Law Reforms

The Commission's proposals for prohibiting further organized crime influence in certain areas of the dental care plan industry were the first to be processed under requirements of the Legislature's 1979 amendments to the statute under which the S.C.I. operates. One new requirement was that the Commission's tranmittal of its recommendations to the Governor and the Legislature be made within 60 days after the conclusion of a public hearing on not yet completed, the Commission compiled with this 60-day rule for amending a 1980 law designed to regulate the activities of S.C.I. law required that the Commission notify the prime sponsor considering such a bill that would be affected by its recommendations prior to issuing them. Since the Commission’s recommendations included a request for favorable action on a proposed state version of the federal Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations (RICO) law, timely notification of this action also was made of Woodbury as prime sponsor of the State RICO bill and to Senator William V. Musto of Union City as the chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, where the RICO bill was then under consideration.

FEDERAL LEGISLATIVE LIAISON

In November, S.C.I. Commissioner Robert J. DeTuro testified on the Commission’s findings in its dental care inquiry before the Select Committee on Aging of the U.S. House of Representatives. Claude Pepper, the committee chairman, observed that the hearings had demonstrated how “employee benefit trust funds are being looted on a scale that few have dared to dream possible.” Accompanying Commissioner DeTuro to the Washington hearing were S.C.I. Executive Director James T. O’Halloran and Agents Frank Zanino and Richard S. Hutchinson. The Commission complied with the House Committee’s requests for copies of its report and recommendations and other data related to its dental care inquiry.

The Commission during 1981 also responded to requests for investigative data and other assistance from the U.S. Senate’s Permanent Subcommittee on Investigation.

THE GOVERNOR'S REQUESTS

HFA INVESTIGATION AND REPORT

One of the requirements of the Commission's enabling statute is that the S.C.I., at the direction of the Governor, conduct investigations with respect to the "management or affairs" of any governmental department or other agency of government. In April, 1981, the Commission issued a report requested by then-Governor Brendan T. Byrne on problems in the operation of New Jersey's Housing Finance Agency.

The Commission's HFA investigation disclosed that certain aggressive, politically connected housing entrepreneurs were able to have their projects aided through a combination of loose agency procedures, an authoritarian executive director in the person of William L. Johnston and, for the most part, a malleable staff. The susceptibility of the agency to influence peddling became rampant during Johnston's leadership from the mid-1970s to the Spring of 1979.

The S.C.I.'s report reviewed the cause and effect of Johnston's misconduct and of the reaction of certain agency personnel to his activities. Even as the Commission's inquiry progressed, the agency under the more effective direction of Bruce G. Coe, who succeeded Johnston as Executive Director in 1979, began to improve its regulatory policies and procedures. (Coe resigned from his post effective January 1, 1982). As stated in its report, the new regime's efforts "represented at least the beginning of a transformation of what had been a myth of internal stability at the agency into an actuality." The Commission added that it hoped its recommendations would "significantly expand that progress through the implementation of many additional reforms."

The S.C.I. report received wide distribution in the executive and legislative branches of government and among the general public. Since that document outlined the Commission's recommendations in full detail, only a summary will be made here.
Proposed Reforms at New Jersey HFA

The recommendations responded to two important findings: (1) the excesses of power exerted by a despotic executive director, and (2) the corruption of a staff that perpetuated the director's power by becoming a subservient vehicle for misconduct. To correct these problems, the Commission proposed a number of administrative checks and balances to ensure that a fully objective system, once in place, would be safeguarded by constant monitoring. In addition, the Commission recommended new and expanded internal standards in order to upgrade the credibility and integrity of the staff.

Most of the recommendations were designed to prescribe favoritism and influence peddling in connection with the processing of HFA project applications. The S.C.I. credited the new agency the evaluation of pending projects. However, the Commission held that the new "Criteria for Project Selection" could be strengthened to increase the effectiveness of this program.

Other proposed reforms:

- Amendment of the HFA enabling law was urged to require a periodic inspection and review of the agency's operations by a Legislative Oversight Committee augmented by the inclusion of certain legal and accounting representatives designated by the Governor. This recommendation followed a trend in recent years toward more concentrated legislative watchdogging of programs enacted and funded by the Legislature. Had this oversight provision been in effect at the HFA in the 1970s, the Commission noted, the scandals that ensued would have been more quickly exposed.

- Because most of the wrongdoing cited by the S.C.I. was attributed to the inadequacies of a former executive director, Johnston, the S.C.I. recommended that the agency's board formulate and implement more objective and thorough policy guidelines for the hiring of its chief operating officer and other key management personnel. The Commission urged that such employment criteria specifically prohibit political intervention and be based on the hiring standards "by which most successful corporations seek out their most capable and effective executive managers."

- The Commission's report observed that internal audits of HFA operations were inadequate and called, in particular, for "spot audits" that would include "the identification of fraud" as a primary objective.

- The Commission urged increased participation of the agency's board members in monitoring HFA operations, including assignment of board members to committees that would evaluate project processing and controversies. The S.C.I. also requested that the agency board's membership be expanded to include additional public members with specialized experience in public housing finances, construction and law. (Legislative bill A.1659, by Assemblyman Alan Karcher of Middlesex, the president Assembly Speaker, addressed this problem and was endorsed by the Commission. It was signed into law in March, 1981.)

- Although a code of ethics was finally adopted by the HFA board in September, 1980, the Commission cited a number of inadequacies of this document that related to areas of wrongdoing revealed in the S.C.I. report. The Commission recommended an absolute prohibition against any agency employee becoming affiliated with any entity doing business with the HFA for a period of two years after the HFA employee's departure from the agency. The Commission recommended additionally an absolute proscription against acceptance of any gift, gratuity or service by an employee.

- The recommendations included a prohibition against any political hiring, primarily through the adoption of objective employment standards similar to those urged for recruitment of the agency's key executive managers.

- One defect in the agency's code of ethics was the failure to provide a vehicle for reporting the possibility of corruption at the HFA's executive management level. The S.C.I. recommended that a report of alleged or actual internal corruption be required to be made to the Attorney General's representative at the agency with a promise of confidentiality during the investigative process. The Commission recalled in its report that at least one HFIA employee was fired when he challenged questionable conduct by a superior.

- Since the S.C.I. reported several instances of attempts to deceive the agency's governing board, the recommendations included a requirement that all present and prospective employees be notified that "any willful misstatement or omission of material fact in any report, memora nda, letter or other official internal or external correspondence of the agency shall be cause for immediate dismissal."

The Commission has announced that a second and final report on its investigation of the HFIA would be forthcoming during 1982.

LAW ENFORCEMENT LIAISON

INTRODUCTION
The Commission last year was contacted by telephone or mail 84 times for various types of assistance from county, state and federal law enforcement agencies in New Jersey and from such agencies in the states of Florida, Maryland, New York, Washington, D.C., and Texas. These contacts generated hundreds of requests for specific assistance, according to data recorded by Commission staff. All requests were expedited. Additionally, the Commission passed 30 resolutions in response to formal requests for confidential Commission information from various New Jersey law enforcement and regulatory agencies, from Federal law enforcement agencies and legislative committees, and from law enforcement officials of other states. Several referrals of possible evidence of criminality were also made pursuant to N.J.S.A. 52:9M-8, of the S.C.I. law.

LIAISON WITH THE ATTORNEY GENERAL
During 1981 the Commission continued its liaison with the Office of the Attorney General and various components of the Department of Law and Public Safety. This liaison was carried out through high-level meetings by the Commissioners with the Attorney General. Additionally, Commission supervisory personnel and the staff of the Attorney General’s office, particularly the Division of Criminal Justice, met on scores of occasions during the course of the year with regard to day-to-day activities.

One of the primary purposes of this close liaison is the maintenance of a dialogue with the chief prosecutorial office in the state so that the Commission can address more effectively broad-based problems in the area of criminal justice reform. The Commission staff and the staff of the Attorney General’s office also often share in the development and support of appropriate legislation resulting from the Commission’s public hearings and reports. Of particular note in this area was the enactment during 1981 of legislation resulting from the Commission’s absentee ballot law inquiry and hearings.
From its outset, the Commission's probe of absentee voting law abuses was a cooperative effort that included both state and county prosecutorial officials. Criminal Justice Director Edwin H. Stier pointed out at the time that the Absentee Voting Law's contradictions, restrictions and ambiguities had defied even the most vigorous attempts to enforce the statute. Therefore, he stated, the Attorney General decided that "the most important vehicle for translating the information which we had found into action toward reform would be... the S.O.I." A productive sharing of investigative files and tasks marked the entire probe. Public hearings confirmed how local politicians coerced voters to advance their own personal and partisan ambitions, how absentee ballots were distributed, collected and cast illegally, and how forgery was employed to sign and alter ballots.

The Commission's recommendations led to the introduction of a number of bills to implement them. A committee substitute for Assembly Bill No. 669 that incorporated the proposed absentee ballot reforms was approved by both legislative houses during 1981 and signed into law as the 1980-81 legislative session concluded its work.

Liaison With County Prosecutors

The Commission takes pride in its increasingly close relationship with all of New Jersey's 21 county prosecutors and their staffs that began with active investigative associations some years ago in Atlantic, Burlington, Camden, Essex, Hudson, Passaic and Union Counties. This linkage between prosecutors and the S.O.I. has been extended to every county and is being constantly reaffirmed as prosecutorial changes occur.

Reference of Evidence

As noted, the Commission made a number of references of potential criminal matters to various federal and state law enforcement agencies. Most of these actions cannot be identified because of continuing reviews and investigations. However, one such reference of evidence—from the Commission's probe of organized crime incursion of dental plans—was made public in December, 1981, when U.S. Attorney W. Hunt Dumont announced the Federal Grand Jury indictment of two witnesses in the S.O.I. investigation and public hearing. The indictments charged that Stanley Reznick of Morristown and John Burkes of Cranford had conspired to transport stolen money in interstate commerce and to make false credit applications. In his announcement, U.S. Attorney Hunt stated in part that "the indictment resulted from evidence developed by the New Jersey State Commission of Investigation." The Commission subsequently received a letter from Robert C. Stewart, the Attorney-in-Charge of the Newark field office of U.S. Attorney Hunt's Organized Crime and Racketeering Section, which stated in connection with the Reznick-Burkes indictment:

"This indictment resulted from evidence developed by the S.O.I. during its probe of pre-paid dental plans operating in the State of New Jersey. I would like to take this opportunity to express our appreciation for the fine investigative work done by the S.O.I. in this manner and for the cooperation of Commission staff members in providing essential assistance to this office, without which the indictment could not have been returned. I would especially like to commend Jules Cayson, Richard Hutchinson, Joseph Corrigan and Chris Klagholz for their invaluable contribution to this joint effort."

Mr. Cayson is the Commission's chief accountant, Mrs. Klagholz is an investigative accountant and Messrs. Hutchinson and Corrigan are S.O.I. special agents.

Interstate Cooperation

The Commission continued its membership in various interstate organizations of a formal and informal nature which relate to its work. Additionally, the Commission received numerous requests for assistance on investigations from various law enforcement agencies throughout the nation. The Commission, in fulfillment of its statutory duty and its recognition of the importance of cooperation among the states in areas such as organized crime, responded to every such request. The Commission itself also obtained assistance from various other states on matters of mutual concern with particular relevance to organized crime and racketeering.
The S.C.I. continued its membership and activities in the National Organization of Investigatory Commissions (NOIC) during 1981. NOIC was created in Princeton in 1978 when the New Jersey S.C.I. met with five other similar state commissions to ratify the concept of a national group. This national organization has as its primary purpose the interchange of information concerning common problems and the maintenance of a dialogue on policy and legal matters relevant to each of the members' agencies.

NOIC now has seven member agencies. In addition to New Jersey's S.C.I., they included investigative bodies from Hawaii, Illinois, New Mexico, New York, Pennsylvania and West Virginia.

During 1981 NOIC continued its project of communicating with the various other states in the country about the possible creation of such an investigative body in those jurisdictions. Several state legislatures are considering statutory measures which would create investigatory commissions. Other states have asked for information from NOIC concerning the overall concept. NOIC is continuing to correspond with these states in order to promote the concept of independent, bipartisan State investigating agencies throughout the country.
Staff Performance

In October, 1981, James T. O’Halloran of Bayonne, former Prosecutor of Hudson County, was sworn into office as Executive Director of the S.C.I., succeeding Michael R. Siavage of Lakewood. Mr. O’Halloran, who is 54, is a graduate of Seton Hall University and of Seton Hall Law School. He was admitted to the New Jersey Bar in 1968 and became counsel to the Bayonne City Housing Authority in 1968. He conducted a private practice in Bayonne until 1974 when he was appointed Hudson County Prosecutor. He was the Hudson Prosecutor for almost seven years.

Mr. O’Halloran came to the S.C.I. in June, 1981, as Deputy Director in preparation for assuming the executive director’s post. In a recent address to a Tax Institute seminar at Fairleigh Dickinson University, he recalled that after joining the Commission, “all of my most pleasant anticipations about the S.C.I. were quickly confirmed,” adding:

“I found, as I had expected, a staff that was industrious and competent. I assumed control of investigations that were progressing in a professional manner. I received voluntary staff suggestions for new inquiries that merited favorable attention. In general, I found that my own prior knowledge of the S.C.I.’s reputation for integrity and diligence had been soundly based.”

The Commission’s staff during 1981 consisted of 42 individuals, including 6 lawyers, 6 accountants and 14 special agents. As in previous years, the staff continued to expand its professional caliber by attending various law enforcement seminars and conferences and accredited educational courses related to their work.

In addition to enrolling in appropriate lecture courses sponsored by the Institute for Continuing Legal Education, S.C.I. lawyers accepted invitations to speak or conduct panel discussions at professional meetings and before citizen groups. All of the Commission’s counsel have had trial or investigative experience in actions against organized crime. Three came to the agency after serving... as assistant prosecutors and another was an assistant district attorney in New York and counsel to the New York City Police Department.

The Commission's accountants not only kept abreast of advances in their field but also shared their knowledge and experience with other law enforcement agencies, particularly in the area of white collar crime and as lecturers at the New Jersey State Police Academy. The S.C.I. chief accountant lectured at the State Police training school for investigators assigned to the Attorney General's Gaming Enforcement Division and submitted a paper for use at the new State Police Intelligence Analysts' School at Sea Girt. Two accountants are Certified Public Accountants. One accountant holds a Master of Business Administration postgraduate degree and another is a candidate for such a degree. Two S.C.I. accountants are former veteran investigators for the U.S. Internal Revenue Service.

Special courses and seminars on white collar crime, government corruption, organized crime and other law enforcement problems were attended by the Commission's special agents. The Commission during 1981 received a letter from the U.S. Justice Department's Organized Crime and Racketeering Section, Camden office, expressing appreciation for S.C.I. staff "cooperation and assistance"—particularly that of one of the Commission's special agents—in a major organized crime judicial proceeding. In addition, another of the Commission's special agents assisted the U.S. Attorney's office in Newark in obtaining an embezzlement indictment to which the defendant pled guilty. The wide-ranging background of the Commission's special agents has been particularly helpful in the successful completion of the agency's unusually varied investigations. Collectively, this background includes previous careers or tours of duty with the U.S. Justice Department, the U.S. Senate's organized crime investigations, the Federal Bureau of Investigation, the State Police, various county prosecutor's offices, the Pennsylvania Crime Commission, many municipal police departments, the NY-NJ Waterfront Commission, a county sheriff's department, and the Military Police. One or another of the special agents periodically presides at regularly scheduled meetings of delegates from approximately 40 federal, state, county and municipal law enforcement agencies from a five-state area. These meetings are designed to develop closer investigative liaison and to review law enforcement matters of mutual concern.

52:9M-10. The Commission shall make an annual report to the Governor and Legislature which shall include its recommendations. The Commission shall make such further interim reports to the Governor and Legislature, or either thereof, as it shall deem advisable, or as shall be required by the Governor or by concurrent resolution of the Legislature.

52:9M-11. By such means and to such extent as it shall deem appropriate, the Commission shall keep the public informed as to the operations of organized crime, problems of law enforcement... and other activities of the Commission.

LIAISON WITH THE PUBLIC

PUBLIC REPORTS

Since its inception the Commission has held a total of 22 public hearings on various law enforcement problems. These hearings were conducted in accordance with the Commission's statutory mandate to publicly demonstrate wrongdoing uncovered by fact-finding investigations. The hearings resulted in the submission to the Governor, the Legislature and the general public of 25 reports summarising investigative findings, reviewing hearing testimony and recommending legislative and regulatory reforms. Many of these recommendations were implemented, as detailed in a summary of major investigations in the Appendices Section of this annual report. In addition, the Commission since 1969 also issued 15 public reports on investigations which did not warrant a public hearing procedure.

A brief listing of these 62 public actions by the S.C.I. during the past decade illustrates the wide-ranging variety of allegations and complaints that, by formal authorization of the Commission, were subjected to its traditional process of probes, hearings and public reports. In the organized crime field, the Commission's continuing confrontation of high-ranking mob figures was highlighted by public hearings and reports on organized crime influence in Long Branch and Monmouth County (1970), organized crime activities in Ocean County (1972), narcotics trafficking (1973), infiltration of legitimate businesses in Atlantic City (1977), organized crime in controlled businesses in the dental health care industry in Atlantic County (1980) and into labor relations profiteering at mass housing projects (1981). In addition, investigations in other law enforcement areas that were subjected to both public hearings and reports included: State eating services' abuses and State building services contractual irregularities (1971), Hudson County Mosquito Commission corruption (1970), Jersey City waterfront land frauds (1971), workers compensation misconduct (1973), misuse of surplus federal property (1973), pseudo-charity solicitations (1974), Lindenwold borough corruption (1974), medicaid-clinical labs (1975), Middlesex land deals (1976), prison furlough abuses (1976), medicaid nursing home schemes (1976-7), improper conduct by private schools for...

As this annual report went to the printer, the Commission was in the process of bringing additional investigations to the public hearing stage.

Citizens Assistance

As in past years, hardly a week passed in 1981 that the Commission did not receive requests for investigative action, assistance or advice from citizens of New Jersey. Commission records indicate more than 120 such citizen contacts, mostly for the purpose of filing complaints about law enforcement and other problems affecting them or their communities. The Commission staff's discussions and reviews of citizen complaints alone required an average of more than 45 minutes per contact.
RESUME OF THE COMMISSION'S MAJOR INVESTIGATIONS

This is a summary of the Commission's major investigations undertaken since June, 1969, when the S.C.I. became staffed and operational. In describing them as major investigations, it is meant that they required considerable time and effort and, where appropriate, resulted in a public hearing or a public report. Since these inquiries have been discussed fully in separate reports or in previous annual reports or in sections of this report, only a brief statement about each — including subsequent results — is set forth.

1. ORGANIZED CRIME CONFRONTATIONS*

Since the summer of 1969, the Commission has been issuing subpoenas for the appearance and testimony of individuals identified by law enforcement authorities as leaders or members of organized crime families operating in New Jersey. This program has been part of the Commission's continuous effort to increase the storehouse of intelligence, mutually shared with law enforcement agencies, about the status, modes and patterns of underworld operations in this state. However, the need to penetrate the so-called "Oath of Silence", behind which organized crime figures try to hide, has required the Commission to utilize every constitutional weapon at its disposal. One of these important anti-crime tools is the power to grant immunity, following procedures that are in strict accord with the protections laid down by statute and the judiciary. The Commission believes that, once witnesses have been granted immunity against the use of their testimony or any leads derived from such testimony, a proper balance has been struck between protecting individual rights and the responsibility of the state to safeguard the public by learning as much as possible about the plans and strategies of the underworld. This philosophy and approach have been approved by the highest state and federal courts.

As part of this program of confrontation, nine organized crime figures who were served with subpoenas elected to undergo extended periods of court-ordered imprisonment for civil contempt for refusing to answer S.C.I. questions. In addition, certain organized crime figures remain under S.C.I. subpoenaa for either continuing or future testimony, including Simione Russo (Sam the Plumber) DeCavalcante, Carl (Pappy) Ippolito and Joseph Paterno. Among the many organized crime figures known to have fled New Jersey in an effort to avoid being served with S.C.I. subpoenas are Anthony (Tony) Accuturo of Livingston, Emilio (The Count) Dello and Joseph Paterno of Newark. Joseph (Donna) Covello of Belleville, John (Johnny D) DiGilio of Paramus, Tino Fiumara of Wyckoff, John (Johnny Keys) Simone (murdered in Staten Island in September, 1980), and Ippolito. The attempt by a number of these to seek alternate places of residence, primarily in South Florida, has been interrupted from time to time by federal and state indictments charging various criminal violations.

Of the nine organized crime figures who refused to testify before the S.C.I., four gained release from jail only after agreeing to testify. These four were Angelo Bruno (murdered in Philadelphia in March, 1980), Nicodemo (Little Nicky) Sciallo, Anthony (Little Pussy) Russo (murdered in Long Branch in April, 1979) and Nicholas Russo. A fifth, Gerardo Catena, who had been imprisoned in March, 1970, was ordered released in 1975 by the New Jersey Supreme Court, which ruled that imprisonment had lost its coercive effect because he had demonstrated a resolve never to testify. Similarly, two others, Ralph (Blackie) Napoli and Louis (Bobby) Mann, subsequently gained release after long periods of incarceration. An eighth, John (Johnny Coca Cola) Lardieri, who had been jailed since 1971 for refusing to testify before the S.C.I., was shot to death in 1977 while on a court-ordered Easter furlough. The ninth, Joseph (Bayonne Joe) Zacarieli, is on temporary medical furlough from jail.

New Jersey's former Attorney General Hyland, who was the S.C.I.'s first chairman, has observed: "... much has already been done to eliminate — or at least to weaken — organized crime. Much of the credit for that success belongs to the S.C.I. for its efforts in seeking testimony from alleged organized crime figures and for focusing the spotlight on, and thus alerting the public to, the problems associated with organized crime."

2. THE GARBAGE INDUSTRY*

The Legislature in 1969 passed a resolution requesting the Commission to investigate the garbage industry and make recommendations for possible corrective action at the state level. An investigation was subsequently undertaken by the S.C.I. of certain practices and procedures in that industry. The investigation ended with two weeks of private hearings, concluding in September, 1969.

A principal finding of the Commission was that some garbage industry trade associations discouraged competition, encouraged collusive bidding, and preserved allocations of customers on a territorial basis. Unless the vice of customer allocation was curbed by the state, the Commission concluded, many municipalities would continue to be faced with the problem of receiving only one bid for waste collection.

The Commission recommended legislative action leading to a statewide approach to regulating and policing the garbage industry. Specific recommendations were: Prohibit customer territorial allocation, price fixing and collusive bidding; provide for licensing by the state (to the exclusion of municipal licenses) of all waste collectors in New Jersey, and prohibit discrimination in the use of privately owned waste disposal areas. State regulation of the industry eventually was enacted by the Legislature.

3. ORGANIZED CRIME IN MONMOUTH COUNTY

The seaside city of Long Branch was in the late 1960s the target of charges and disclosures about the influence of organized crime. One charge was that an organized crime figure, Anthony (Little Pussy) Russo, controlled the mayor and the city council. Official reports indicated mob figures were operating in an atmosphere relatively secure from law enforcement. The Commission began an investigation in May, 1969, that culminated with public hearings in early 1970. Among the disclosures were:

That a Long Branch city manager was ousted from his job by the city council after he began taking counter-action against organized crime's influence; that Russo offered to get the city manager's job back for that same person if he would close his eyes products and the chief of detectives to pay informants was not used for that purpose and could not be accounted for. The testimony also detailed how that fund was solely controlled by the chief with no county audit and no supervision by the county prosecutor. In fact, that a disproportionate share of authority had been vested in this office. Twenty-four hours after the Commission issued its report, the chief lacked the integrity and desire to investigate organized crime and stem its influence.

After the hearings, the irresponsible police chief resigned and the electorate voted in a new administration.

The Asbury Park Press commented editorially that the Commission’s hearings did more good than four previous grand jury investigations. Also, the Commission’s special agents developed detailed fiscal information and records relating to corporations formed by Russo, information which was used by federal authorities in obtaining a 1971 indictment of Russo on a charge of failure to file corporate income tax returns. He pleaded guilty to that charge and received a three-year prison sentence. Russo was murdered in 1979.

The Long Branch inquiry extended to the office of Monmouth County’s then chief of county detectives. This probe determined that a disproportionate share of authority had been vested in this office. Twenty-four hours after the Commission issued subpoenas in October, 1969, the chief committed suicide.

Public hearings were held in late 1970. Testimony showed that a confidential expense account supposedly used for nine years by the chief of detectives to pay informants was not used for that purpose and could not be accounted for. The testimony also detailed how that fund was solely controlled by the chief with no county audit and no supervision by the county prosecutor. In fact, the county prosecutor testified that he signed vouchers in blank.

The Commission after the hearing made a series of recommendations to reform the county prosecutor system. A principal recommendation was for full-time prosecutors and assistants. A state law, since enacted, has established full-time prosecutorial staffs in the more populous counties of New Jersey and additional statutes are requiring full-time prosecutors in certain other counties. Prior to the Commission’s probe, there were no full-time county prosecutors in the state.

4. THE STATE DIVISION OF PURCHASE AND PROPERTY*

The Commission in February, 1970,* began investigating charges of corrupt practices and procedures involving the State Division of Purchase and Property and suppliers of state services. Public hearings were held at which testimony showed payoffs to a state buyer to get cleaning contracts for state buildings, rigging of bids on state contracts, renewal of those contracts without bidding, unsatisfactory performance of work called for under state contracts, and illegal contracting of such work.

After the investigation, the state buyer was dismissed from his job. Records of the investigation were turned over to the State Attorney General’s Office which obtained an indictment charging the buyer with misconduct in office. He pleaded guilty and was fined and placed on probation.

This investigation met with immediate corrective steps by the Division of Purchase and Property, which voluntarily changed procedures to prevent recurrence of similar incidents.

5. THE BUILDING SERVICES INDUSTRY

The probe of the Division of Purchase and Property brought to the Commission’s attention anti-competitive and other improper practices and influences in the building services industry. Public hearings were held in June, 1970.

Testimony showed the existence of a trade organization designed to thwart competition by limiting free bidding and enterprise. The hearings also revealed that a union official linked with organized crime figures was the real power in the trade organization, and that coerced sales of certain detergent cleaning products and imposition of sweetheart contracts were sometimes the price of labor peace. The inquiry also revealed that a major organized crime figure in New Jersey acted as an arbiter of disputes between some cleaning companies.

The Commission’s investigation of restraint-of-trade and other abusive practices in the building service and maintenance industry aroused the interest of the United States Senate Commerce Committee. The committee invited the S.C.I. to testify at its 1972 public hearings on organized crime in interstate commerce. As a result of that testimony, the Anti-Trust Division of the United States Justice Department, with assistance from the S.C.I., launched an investigation into an association which allocated territories and customers to various member building service maintenance companies in New Jersey. In May, 1974, a Federal Grand Jury indicted 12 companies and 17 officials for conspiring to shut out competition in the industry. The companies were the same as those involved in the S.C.I.'s public hearings. Attorney Roger L. Currier of the Justice Department's anti-trust division in Philadelphia, in coordination with the U.S. Attorney's office in New Jersey, brought the entire case to a final conclusion on Oct. 25, 1977. On that date the defendants ended the government's civil action by agreeing to a consent judgment stipulating they would abandon the practices alleged against them. Earlier, the government's criminal suit against the defendants was completed in March, 1976, by which time one company had pleaded guilty to the charges, the other defendants pleaded no contest and fines totaling $233,000 were levied.

6. THE HUDSON COUNTY MOSQUITO COMMISSION*

During 1970 the Commission received allegations of corrupt practices in the operation of the Hudson County Mosquito Extermination Commission. An investigation led to public hearings at the close of 1970.

The Mosquito Commission's treasurer, who was almost blind, testified that he signed checks and vouchers on direction from the agency's executive director. The testimony also revealed kickback payments in connection with construction projects or rights-of-way in the Hudson meadowlands, the existence of a secret bank account, and kickback payments by contractors and suppliers under a fraudulent voucher scheme.

One result of this investigation was abolition of the Mosquito Commission, an agency which served no valid function and whose annual budget was approaching the $500,000 mark.

Also, after receiving S.C.I. records of the investigation, the Hudson County Prosecutor's Office obtained conspiracy and embellishment indictments against the Mosquito Commission's executive director and his two sons. The executive director pleaded guilty to embellishment and in June, 1973, was sentenced to two to four years in prison. His sons pleaded guilty to conspiracy and were fined $1,000 each.

7. MISAPPROPRIATION OF FUNDS IN ATLANTIC COUNTY*

The Commission in 1970 investigated the misappropriation of $130,196 that came to light with the suicide of a purchasing agent in Atlantic County's government. The Commission in December of that year issued a detailed public report which documented in sworn testimony a violation of public trust and a breakdown in the use of the powers of county government. The inquiry revealed how that purchasing agent fraudulently diverted money to his own use over a period of 13 years. The sworn testimony confirmed that for years prior to 1971, monthly appropriation sheets of many departments contained irregularities traceable to the purchasing agent but that no highly placed county official ever tried to get a full explanation of those irregularities. The testimony also disclosed that after county officials were first notified by the bank about the false check endorsement part of the agent's scheme, an inadequate investigation was conducted by some county officials.

Copies of the Commission's report were sent to Freeholder Boards throughout the state for use as a guide in preventing any further instances of similar misappropriation of funds. As a result of fiscal irregularities uncovered in its probes not only of Atlantic County but also of county agencies in Monmouth and Hudson counties, the Commission recommended that county and municipal auditors be mandated to exercise more responsibility for maintaining integrity, with stress on continuous reviews of the internal controls of county and local governments.

8. DEVELOPMENT OF POINT BREEZE IN JERSEY CITY

The lands that lie along the Jersey City waterfront are among the most valuable and economically important in the state. The Commission in the Spring of 1971 investigated allegations of cr ruption and other irregularities in the development of the Point Breeze area of Jersey City's waterfront as a containerhip port and an industrial park.

The investigation revealed a classic, informative example of how a proper and needed development could be frustrated by improper procedures. Public hearings in October, 1971, disclosed a payoff to public officials, improper receipt of real estate commissions, and irregular approaches to the use of state laws for blighted areas and granting tax abatement.

Two bills implementing S.C.I. recommendations from this probe were enacted into law. One improved the urban renewal process by publicly owned lands from receiving any purchase fee attendant on such a purchase.

In addition, the Commission referred probe records to prosecutorial authorities. A Hudson County Grand Jury returned an indictment charging a former Jersey City building inspector with extorting $1,900 from an official of the Port Jersey Corp. and obtaining money under false pretenses. The inspector was convicted of obtaining money under false pretenses and fined $300 and given a six-month suspended sentence.

9. TACTICS AND STRATEGIES OF ORGANIZED CRIME*

Although not a "sworn" member of organized crime, Herbert Gross, a former Lakewood hotel operator and real estate man, became during 1969-70 a virtual part of the mob through involvement in numbers banks, shylock loan operations, cashing of stolen checks, and real estate transactions. In order to shorten a State Prisons administration to cooperate with government agencies, including the S.C.I.

Gross's testimony during two days of public hearings by the Commission in February, 1972, pinpointed the ruthless operations of organized crime figures in the Ocean County area and their New York City. His testimony and that of other witnesses detailed how mobsters infiltrated a legitimate motel business in Lakewood. A former restaurant concessionaire at that motel testified that because of shylock loans arranged through an organized crime association, he lost assets of about $60,000 in six months.

Records of this investigation were made available to federal authorities who subsequently obtained an extortion-conspiracy indictment against nine organized crime figures relative to a shylock loan dispute which culminated with an underworld "sitdown" or trial. New Jersey law enforcement officials testified at the S.C.I. hearings that the public exposure afforded by those sessions demonstrated the need for continually active vigilance against organized crime, particularly in rapidly developing areas.

10. PROPERTY PURCHASES IN ATLANTIC COUNTY*

The Commission during 1971 received information that the State may have overpaid for the site of the Stockton State College in Galloway Township, Atlantic County. Subsequent field investigations and private hearings extending into 1972 showed that payment of $924 an acre for a key 595-acre tract was indeed excessive.

Substantially the same acreage had been sold only nine months earlier by two corporations headed by some Atlantic City businessmen to a New York City-based land purchasing group for $475 per acre, which was about double the per acre price of two comparable large-tract sales in the Galloway area. The Commission in a public report in June, 1972, cited two critical flaws as leading to excessive overpayment for the land by the state: Inadequate and misleading appraisals of land that had recently changed hands at a premium price, and a lack of expertise and safeguards in State Division of Purchase and Property procedures to discover and correct the appraisal problems.

The report stressed a number of recommendations to insure that the Division would in the future detect and correct faults in appraisals. Key recommendations were post-appraisal reviews by qualified experts and strict pre-qualification of appraisers before being listed as eligible to work for the state. The recommendations were promptly implemented by the Division.

11. Bank Fraud in Middlesex County

Investigative activities during 1971 in Middlesex County directed the Commission's attention to Santo B. Santisi, then president of the Middlesex County Bank, which he founded. A probe by the Commission's special agents and special agents/accountants concentrated on Santisi-controlled corporations, in particular the Otas Holding Company.

The probe uncovered schemes by Santisi and his entourage for the use of publicly invested funds in Otas solely for their own personal gain, apparently illicit public sale of stock without the required state registration and misapplication by Santisi of hundreds of thousands of dollars of funds of the Middlesex County Bank. Those funds were "loaned" to members of the Santisi group who either personally or through their corporations acted as conduits to divert the money for the benefit of Santisi and some of his corporations.

During the first quarter of 1972 the Commission completed private hearings in this investigation but deferred planned public hearings at the request of bank examiners who expressed fears about the impact of adverse publicity on the bank's financial health. Instead, the S.C.I. referred data from this investigation to federal authorities who obtained indictments of Santisi and several of his cohorts on charges involving the misapplied bank funds. All pleaded guilty. Swihart was sentenced to three years in prison. One of his associates was sentenced to a year in prison and two others received suspended sentences.

12. The Office of the Attorney General

In the summer of 1972 the Commission was requested by the then Attorney General of New Jersey, George F. Kugler, Jr., to investigate his office's handling of the case of Paul J. Sherwin, the Secretary of State who was convicted on a conspiracy indictment in connection with a campaign contribution made by a contractor who had bid on a state highway contract. The request triggered an investigation which extended into early 1973. The Commission took from 22 witnesses sworn testimony consisting of more than 1,300 pages of transcripts and also introduced exhibits consisting of more than 300 pages. The Commission, by unanimous resolution, issued in 1973 a 1,600-page report which was forwarded to the Governor and the Legislature and to all news media. John J. Francis, the retired Associate Justice of the New Jersey Supreme Court, served without compensation as Special Counsel to the Commission in the investigation.

A primary conclusion of the report which climaxed this inquiry — a report which made public all recorded testimony and exhibits — was that "we find no reliable evidence whatever to reasonably justify a conclusion that Attorney General Kugler was derelict in his law enforcement obligations." The report also attacked certain types of political campaign contributions as a "malignant cancer in the bloodstream of our political life" and urged the prohibition of such contributions to public officials by those aspiring for governmental contracts.

13. The Workers' Compensation System

New Jersey's system for compensating individuals for employment injuries became during the early 1970s the object of intense scrutiny. In addition to evidence and statistics indicating faults in the system, there were persistent published reports that irregularities, abuses and illegalities were being ignored or condoned. Mounting complaints led the State Commissioner of Labor and Industry to request an investigation. That task, which was undertaken by the S.C.I., was one of the agency's most comprehensive inquiries. The facts, as presented at nine days of public hearings in Trenton in May-June, 1973, documented abuses which included unwarranted compensation claims, lavish gift-giving and entertaining, questionable conduct by some judges, and the use by some law firms of favored heat-treating doctors or "house doctors" who inflated claims by bill-paddling.

As a result of the investigation, three Judges of Compensation were given disciplinary suspensions, with one of them eventually being dismissed from office by the Governor. After referral of the report to prosecutorial authorities, an Essex County Grand Jury during 1975 indicted two partners of a law firm and the firm's business manager on charges of conspiracy and obtain-money under false pretenses in connection with the alleged heat-treatment, bill-padding scheme exposed at the S.C.I.'s public hearings. Also, the Waterfront Commission of New York Harbor used the investigative techniques and methodology established by the S.C.I. in this investigation to uncover widespread Workmen's Compensation frauds involving dock workers.

14. MISUSE OF SCHOOL PROPERTY IN PASSAIC COUNTY*

A citizen's complaint received in January, 1973, prompted the Commission to inquire into the handling and distribution by the State of federal surplus property donated for use in schools and other institutions as well as questionable transactions at the Passaic County Vocational and Technical High School in Wayne.
The investigation was capped by five days of public hearings at the Passaic County Courthouse in Paterson.

The hearings disclosed that the school's purchasing agent, who also was its business manager, failed to obtain competitive prices for many goods purchased, that substantial amounts of goods and services were purchased through mugglemen, one of whom marked up prices by more than 100 per cent, and that regular payoffs were made to the school's purchasing agent. The evidence also con-

This investigation led to S.C.I. recommendations for administra-tional corrective steps to establish an efficient program of state distribution of the surplus property and for improved procedures for school boards in overseeing purchasing practices. The State Board of Education relayed the S.C.I. recommendations to all school boards in the state with instructions to be guided by them.

Further, after referral of data from this probe to the State
Criminal Justice Division, a State Grand Jury indicted Alex Smollock, the school's manager and purchasing agent, on charges of taking nearly $40,000 in kickbacks. He was convicted of nine counts of accepting bribes and was sentenced to one to three years in state prison and fined $5,000. Superior Court Appellate Division early in 1977 upheld Smollock's conviction. Later, in March, 1977,

15. THE DRUG TRAFFIC AND LAW ENFORCEMENT*

Narcotics and their relationship to law enforcement in New Jersey are a natural area of concern for the Commission, since the huge profits to be made from illicit narcotics trafficking are an obvious lure to criminal elements. As a result of an increase in the S.C.I.'s intelligence gathering during 1973 relative to narcotics, the Commission obtained considerable information concerning certain criminal elements in Northern New Jersey.
A subsequent investigation produced a mass of detail about drug trafficking. At public hearings in late 1973, witnesses revealed their involvement in heroin and cocaine transactions in North Jersey, marked by accounts of a killing and an attempt by crime figures to persuade a witness to commit murder. Federal, state and county authorities testified about the international, interstate and intra-

Due to a combination of a reliable informant and an extensive follow-up investigation by S.C.I. agents, this probe had significant collateral results. These included the solving of a gangland style slaying case and the busting of a stolen jewelry fencing ring and a crime federation burglary ring of more than 30 individuals. Both the Essex County (N. J.) Prosecutor and the Lackawanna County (Pa.) District Attorney complimented the S.C.I. for referrals of probe data and otherwise aiding law enforcement. The hearings also generated S.C.I. recommendations for an improved law enforcement attack on narcotics distribution and for revisions of the narcotics law, including sterner penalties for non-addict pushers.

in March, 1974.
16. PSEUDO-CHARITABLE FUND-RAISING APPEALS*

A growing number of companies were established in New Jersey to sell by telephone exorbitantly high-priced household products, principally light bulbs, in the name of allegedly handicapped workers. Although different in age, size and some operating procedures, all created an illusion of charitable works for the references to “handicapped” or “the handicapped.” Consumers by the hundreds, outraged upon learning they had been duped into thinking these profit-oriented businesses were charities, registered complaints with the State Division of Consumer Affairs. That because of the broader purview of the Commission’s statute, the Commission’s investigative record and its public exposure powers.

Facts put into the public record at hearings held by the S.C.I. in June, 1974, included: That people were willing to pay high prices as much as $100 per cent above cost only because tele-some companies used healthy solicitors who claimed they were handicapped to induce sales; that solicitors, handicapped or not, sales to assure a profit for the owners; that an owner of one company received a total of more than $1 million in four years from the by having to constantly dwell on their ailments in order to induce dollars each year that otherwise could be tapped by authentic charities.

Access to data from this investigation was offered to federal officials both during the probe and immediately after the public companies identified at the S.C.I.’s hearings and the sales manager thick. Both pleaded guilty.

A number of bills to implement S.C.I. recommendations in the
In April, 1977, Governor Brendan T. Byrne signed into law a bill to require authorization by the Attorney General before corporations can identify themselves as fund raisers for the “handicapped” or the “blind.” Another bill, to require professional fund raisers to provide financial reports to the Attorney General, also cleared the Legislature and was signed into law by the Governor on December 15, 1977.

17. THE DELAWARE RIVER PORT AUTHORITY*

The State Executive Commission on Ethical Standards during 1974 requested the S.C.I.’s assistance in investigating allegations of possible conflicts of interest of Ralph Cornell, then the Chairman of the Delaware River Port Authority. He had been a commissioner of that Authority since its inception in 1951. The reason for the request, as stated by the Ethics Commission, was that “the State Commission of Investigation is better equipped in terms of personal, resources and operating procedures to conduct this inquiry.”

The investigation involved the analysis of a virtual mountain of books and records of the Authority, corporations and banks in order to expose certain business relationships relative to subcon-tracting work done on Authority projects. After holding private hearings on 14 occasions from March through August of 1974, the Commission issued a comprehensive public report on this inquiry sent it to the Governor and the Ethical Standards Commission, appropriately leaving to that Commission the final judgments on the full factual picture presented by the report. The Attorney General’s Office was also given copies of the report.

In October, 1977, the Delaware River Port Authority agreed to accept a payment of $90,656 by Mr. Cornell as a repayment of profits some of his firms made on Authority projects. The settlement represented a compromise of the Authority’s claim that the profits amounted to $84,339 and Mr. Cornell’s claim that they were $37,004. Port Authority counsel said the settlement was accepted to avoid “extensive expensive litigation.” Cornell’s counsel emphasized that the settlement was not to be regarded as an admission of liability. Mr. Cornell, who was absolved of any criminal wrongdoing by the state in 1976, was not reappointed to the Authority when his term expired in January, 1977.

the Delaware River Port Authority, a Report by the New Jersey State Commission of Investigation, October, 1974.
18. THE GOVERNMENT OF LINDENWOLD*

A citizen's letter alleging abuses in the government of the Borough of Lindenwold, a rapidly developed suburban community in Camden County, was received by the Commission in the latter part of 1973. One of the letter's signatories, a former Borough Councilman in Lindenwold, in a subsequent interview with S.C.I. special agents, told not only of abuses concerning ethical standards but also of official corruption. He brought with him to the S.C.I.'s office $5,000 he received, but never spent, as his share of payoffs made for votes favorable to land development projects.

The Commission obtained substantial corroboration of this man's story of amorality in the Borough's government. At three days of public hearings in Trenton in December, 1974, the Commission heard testimony supported by numerous exhibits that officials in return for favorable treatment and cooperation of the Borough government, that a Borough official and a county official had accepted substantial amounts of cash from companies owning land subject to the officials' regulation, and that Lindenwold public officials used strawmen to mask their purchases of properties which were offered for sale by the Borough.

The principal S.C.I. recommendation stemming from this hearing was for enactment of a tough conflict of interest law to apply uniformly on a statewide basis to all county and municipal officials. Legislation meeting the S.C.I.'s standards is pending in the Legislature.

The S.C.I. referred the Lindenwold probe records to the Criminal Justice Division which obtained State Grand Jury indictments in 1975. Former Mayor William J. McDade and real estate developer John Piper pleaded guilty to bribery and conspiracy charges on September 28, 1977, as their trial was scheduled to start. Former Councilman Arthur W. Scheid was found guilty on three counts and former Councilman Dominic Stratianni was found guilty on two counts after their trial concluded October 5, 1977.

19. LAND ACQUISITION BY MIDDLESEX COUNTY*

The Commission received a series of citizens' complaints during the Spring of 1975 about alleged overpayment by the Middlesex County government for purchase of certain lands for park purposes under the State's Green Acres program. A preliminary inquiry by the Commission indicated that overpayments had occurred and that faulty real estate appraisals and insufficient review of those appraisals by the County's Land Acquisition Department and by the State's Green Acres unit were at the root of the problem. Accordingly, the Commission authorized a full-scale investigation of the County's land acquisition procedures and related Green Acres program practices. Public hearings were held in Trenton in January, 1976.

As a result of the S.C.I.'s exposures in this investigation, the Administrator of the County's Land Acquisition Department was suspended from his post, and the County government moved to institute a more stringent process of checks and balances on land acquisition procedures. Even before the S.C.I. completed its 1976 hearings, arrangements were being formalized voluntarily by state officials, alerted by the Commission's findings, for the transfer of the Green Acres appraisal and post-appraisal review and control system from the Department of Environmental Protection to the Department of Transportation — one of many general and technical recommendations by the Commission that were implemented as a result of the inquiry. In addition, data from the S.C.I. investigation was referred to prosecutorial authorities.

The Middlesex Grand Jury investigated the conduct of the Middlesex County Land Acquisition Department and its former Administrator as a result of allegations raised during public hearings by the S.C.I. On September 27, 1976, the Grand Jury returned a presentment in which it said that while it found "no procurable affirmative criminal act" by the Administrator, "it does feel that his actions in that capacity indicated an insufficient expertise and lack of concern to perform his office in the best interests of the citizens of Middlesex County." The Grand Jury also noted that he solicited and collected political contributions from the same people with whom he dealt as departmental administrator.

The Grand Jury's presentment noted that "since the public hearings of the State Commission of Investigation in January, 1976..."

* See New Jersey State Commission of Investigation, Annual Report for 1972.
the Freeholders of Middlesex County have already taken substantial corrective actions." However, it urged in addition that the "discredited" from solicitation and collection of political contributions contracts be forbidden from soliciting contributions from inmates over whom they have the power to award contracts."

In August, 1981, the Middlesex freeholder board authorized the $1.8 million in overpayments for parklands that had been revealed by the S.C.I. probe.

20. PRE-PAROLE RELEASE IN THE PRISONS*

The Commission during 1974 and 1975 received complaints alleging abuses of the pre-parole release programs of New Jersey's re-introducing inmates to society. Inclusion furloughs, work releases, inquiries to evaluate the complaints indicated clearly that the gross misconduct attributable to weaknesses in the operation and supervision of the programs.

Accordingly, the Commission by resolution in September, 1975, authorized a full investigation. The probe extended into 1976, Principal disclosures at the hearings included:

* Falsification of furlough and other types of applications to gain premature entry into the release programs.
* Establishment of favored statuses for some inmates and as a result a system of bartering for favors, including monetary exchange among inmates.
* The ease with which work, educational and other releases could be ripped off because of insufficient supervision in hands of the inmates themselves.
* The intrusion of a barter-favors system for the transfer of inmates from one to another of the various penal institutions.

As the Commission stated publicly, its probe and hearings were aided substantially by Ann Klein, the former Commissioner of Institutions and Agencies who became Commissioner of Human Services, and by Robert J. Maloney, Jr., the former Deputy Commissioner of Institutions who, as the first Commissioner of a new State Department of Corrections, initiated major reforms of prison furlough procedures. These changes included elimination of inmate supervision of the furlough program and the provision of funds for non-inmate control of it, as the Commission had recommended.

In addition to these reforms, a series of indictments and arrests resulted after the Commission referred its facts and public hearings transcripts to the Attorney General and other appropriate prosecuting authorities.

The Attorney General announced in January, 1977, the indictment by the State Grand Jury of five former inmates of Leesburg State Prison, on charges of escape in connection with alleged fraudulent obtaining of furloughs from the prison.

The State Grand Jury also indicted a since-dismissed clerk of Trenton State Prison for false swearing and perjury as a result of her testimony on prison furlough abuses during the Commission's private and public hearings. A glaring abuse involving the ex-clerk was the utilization of a bogus court opinion to obtain a substantial reduction in the prison sentence—and therefore the premature release—of one inmate, Patrick Pizutto, known to law enforcement authorities as an unterling of the late Anthony (Little Pussy) Russo, a seashore mob figure. This disclosure at the S.C.I.'s hearing led to the immediate reincarceration of Pizutto, who was subsequently indicted for murder and on federal bank fraud charges. On December 8, 1977, Superior Court Appellate Division dismissed as moot Pizutto's appeal from his reincarceration. Pizutto subsequently became an informant for law enforcement authorities investigating underworld crimes and is in the federal witness protection program.

21. THE NEW JERSEY MEDICAID PROGRAM*

In December of 1974 Governor Brendan T. Byrne requested the State Commission of Investigation to conduct an evaluation of New Jersey's system of Medicaid reimbursement.

* See New Jersey State Commission of Investigation Eighth Annual Report, issued in April, 1977.

* See New Jersey State Commission of Investigation 1975, 1976 and 1977 Annual Reports.
The extent to which this $400 million-a-year program of health care for the poor was under simultaneous investigation by the complexities of the various functions involved and the degree to which they were misused and abused at great public cost.

During the course of its probe, the Commission reported to the pattern based on the premise, later substantiated, that the social health care delivery system was rife with widespread exploitation of the huge tory and regulatory correction. A chronological charting of the public steps:

- NURSING HOMES—An initial public report by the S.C.I. on April 3, 1975, exposed serious flaws in the rental and related phases paid-participating nursing homes, one critical conclusion of which was that inflated reimbursement schedules allowed unreasonably inflated profits to greedy entrepreneurs at heavy cost to taxpayers.

- CLINICAL LABORATORIES—A formal public S.C.I. pronouncement on April 23, 1975, detailed dangerously poor conditions and程序s in certain independent clinical laboratories and recommended swift legislative enactment of a pending remedial measure. The highly effective Clinical Laboratories Act.

- CLINICAL LABORATORIES—The Commission conducted in June, 1975, a series of public hearings that effectively exposed how Medicaid money was being bilked by some independent clinical laboratories. The S.C.I.'s probe and recommendations in this vital area were followed by major reforms. The Medicaid manual regulating independent clinical laboratories was drastically revised to bar laboratories that had been found wanting in these improvements alone were estimated to save $100 million for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1976.

- MEDICAID MILLS—How some doctors, dentists and pharmacists corrupted the system was dramatized by the Commission's exposé of over-billing and over-utilization practices that hazard a loophole potential far wider abuse of the Medicaid system.

- MEDICAID HOSPITALS—Utilizing its staff of accountant-agents, an S.C.I. team made an in-depth assessment of the emerging rate-regulating and Medicaid reimbursement process affecting hospitals with substantial Medicaid in-patient care. This was done to determine the adequacy, if any, of fiscal controls by supervisory public agencies to ensure the system's efficiency, economy and integrity. Such an unusually complex analysis of methods of controlling hospital costs was vital because of the huge impact of such costs on the Medicaid program.

A number of statutory and regulatory steps were taken in response to the revelations of abuses and exploitation of the Medicaid system following—and even during—the Commission's investigations, interim reports and public hearings. Some of these actions included: 1. A law increasing maximum penalties for billing the Medicaid program through over-billing and false billing. 2. The Medicaid program was tightened to clearly proscribe the practice by which small laboratories subcontracted particular tests to large reference facilities and then, in many instances, marked-up the cost by more than 300 per cent and reaped windfall profits at the taxpayer's expense. The manual now explicitly prohibits the breakdown of automated component-part tests into those which cost less than $3.50 to perform. A computer system for analyzing and screening group tests was developed. The Division took steps to ensure that laboratories fully identify the procedures performed and for which payment is requested. In this intermediary that all claims be itemized in detail. Aggregate requests for reimbursement—no longer tolerated. The Division payments in any form whatever between laboratories and physician customers.

The Division cured a glaring weakness by employing more staff expertise in clinical laboratory processes and procedures. At the conclusion of the second phase of the Commission's in October, 1976, the Commission urged that Senate Bill 594, requiring full public disclosure of those who have financial or other to eliminate practices that siphoned health care dollars from subsequently was amended on the Assembly floor in accordance cleared both the Assembly and the Senate and was signed into law in September, 1977.

Additionally, subsequent to the issuance of its Final Report on Nursing Homes, the Commission persisted in its efforts to have nursing homes restructured along the lines suggested by the Commission, which will show a savings of as much as $6 million per year, according to the Director of the Division of Medical Resistance and Health Services.

Certain unusually alarming aspects of the Commission's complicated Medicaid inquiry, such as the clinical laboratory abuses and the evils of the "medicaid mills," helped to spur corrective efforts. In fact, the clinical laboratory phase was a pioneering probe that revealed for the first time the hard facts about unscrupulous rip-offs of the system. These disclosures resulted in the appearance of Commission officials before the U.S. Senate Committee on Aging and the U.S. House of Representatives Subcommittee on Oversight and Investigation.

22. ORGANIZED CRIME AND CASINO GAMBLING IN ATLANTIC CITY*

After New Jersey voters authorized legalization of casino gambling in Atlantic City on Nov. 2, 1976, and at the request of Governor Brendan T. Byrne, the Commission directed an extensive surveillance of organized crime activities in that shore resort region for the purpose of taking "public action in order to make constructive recommendations to the Governor, the Legislature, and the people for the effective control and policing of casino gambling." As a part of this investigative effort, the Commission issued on April 13, 1977, a 167-page report to the Governor and the Legislature highlighting 57 detailed recommendations for an effective control law that would "thwart the infiltration of casinos and related services and suppliers by organized crime." Upon passage of the Casino Gambling Control Act, the Commission characterized it as an acceptable statutory base upon which to build even stronger controls in the future.

By the Summer of 1977, the Commission's monitoring of organized crime activities linked to the development of the new gaming industry in Atlantic City had uncovered enough evidence of an actual intrusion of legitimate business to warrant public hearings in keeping with the S.C.I.'s statutory mandate to alert and inform the citizenry. The Commission's inquiry had revealed, as was later confirmed publicly, that organized crime—in addition to its historic interest in casinos and allied services—was also, already, penetrating certain other legitimate businesses that had not been a target of legislative restraints and over which regulatory controls, where they existed at all, were inadequate and only casually enforced.

The Commission conducted four days of public hearings in August, 1977, during which a succession of witnesses, including organized crime figures, revealed through testimony the machinations of mobsters in such legitimate enterprises as cigarette vending machines, bars, restaurants, hotels and gambling schools. The hearings confirmed the cooperative interest in casino gaming spin-off action by Angelo Bruno, boss of the Philadelphia-South Jersey crime family, and cohorts of the Gambino crime family of the New York metropolitan area. Bruno himself was a witness.

On January 12, 1978, the Commission made public a report that emphasized a recommendation to more effectively prohibit the acceptance of applicants with organized crime backgrounds for licensure as cigarette vending agents of the state or as owners and operators of ventures under jurisdiction of the Alcoholic Beverage Control laws.

Based on the Commission's recommendations, two bills were sponsored by Senator Steven P. Perskie, D-Atlantic. One bill, S-3008, was designed to strengthen the licensing requirements of the State Division of Taxation for those involved in the cigarette industry and the other, S-3010, sought stronger licensing standards for the Alcoholic Beverage Commission. The purpose of these bills was "to impede organized crime from using various subterfuges to camouflage the actual ownership and control of legitimate business." Senator Perskie's bills were approved by the Senate in May, 1979, but only S-3008, pertaining to the cigarette industry, passed in the Assembly and was signed into law in February, 1980.

23. PRIVATE SCHOOL ABUSES OF SPECIAL EDUCATION FUNDS*

During the early part of 1977, increasing complaints and allegations were circulating throughout the state about alleged abuses by non-public schools of New Jersey's $26 million Special Education program for severely handicapped children. The State Commission of Investigation was the recipient of a number of such complaints.

By June, the Commission's staff was pursuing fresh reports of questionable activities if not outright misconduct by some non-public schools. Inquiries in the field were supplemented by in-depth auditing of actual expense budgets and hundreds of bank checks, vouchers, purchase orders, and miscellaneous business records. These inquiries and audits confirmed the misuse of large sums of money that had been earmarked for the education of more than 5,000 children too seriously handicapped to be served by the public schools.

The Commission held public hearings on January 19 and 29, 1978, and on May 18, 1978, issued its formal report to the Governor, the Legislature and the public. The S.C.I.'s recommendations centered on its findings of inadequate staffing and malfunctioning of the Education Department's Branch of Special Education and Pupil Personnel Services, the absence of a clear, detailed list of allowable and non-allowable private school expenses, inadequate record keeping and reporting requirements for participating schools, and an inefficient rate-setting procedure.

Several bills focusing on problems bored by the Commission's investigation and hearings were introduced in the Legislature in 1978, during the drafting and discussions of which the Commission maintained contact with appropriate legislators and legislative committee aides.

24. ABUSES AND IRREGULARITIES IN THE BOARDING HOME INDUSTRY

The Commission's investigation of abuses and irregularities in New Jersey's boarding homes focused on an industry consisting of an estimated 1,800 facilities serving upwards of 40,000 people, most of whom are elderly and disabled. These boarding facilities were assigned to one of two categories—licensed or "unlicensed." The former group consisted of about 275 boarding homes under State Department of Health licensure. But the unlicensed category was further divided, the largest subgroup of which was subject to nominal registration and inspection by the State Department of Community Affairs. A smaller bloc came under local jurisdiction. Finally, an unknown number of facilities operated illegally, devoid of any controls whatsoever.

The fact that more than 1,500 boarding homes were commonly referred to as "unlicensed" underscored the negative quality and

The Commission's public hearings in late 1978 on absentee ballot abuses and irregularities climaxed a prolonged series of inquiries by the S.C.I. and other state and county law enforcement agencies, and by the press, in numerous localities of the state. These investigations confirmed a widespread and flagrant disregard of a law that, although enacted with the intention of safeguarding the sanctity of the ballot for eligible voters unable to go to the polls and by various county prosecutors particularly illustrated—that effective prosecution of obvious violators was practically impossible. The statute's contradictions, restrictions and loopholes

25. ABUSES OF NEW JERSEY'S ABSENTEE BALLOT LAW*

The Commission's public hearings in late 1978 on absentee ballot abuses and irregularities climaxed a prolonged series of inquiries by the S.C.I. and other state and county law enforcement agencies, and by the press, in numerous localities of the state. These investigations confirmed a widespread and flagrant disregard of a law that, although enacted with the intention of safeguarding the sanctity of the ballot for eligible voters unable to go to the polls in person, was so ambiguously constructed as to invite fraud at every step of the absentee voting procedure. So inadequate was this law—as probes by Attorney General John J. Dagnan's office and by various county prosecutors particularly illustrated—that effective prosecution of obvious violators was practically impossible. The statute's contradictions, restrictions and loopholes defied the most vigorous prosecutorial attempts to indict and convict individuals who coerced voters to advance their own personal and political ambitions, who improperly distributed and collected absentee votes in bargain-basement fashion, and who forged signatures and altered ballots. Because of the persistent statutory impediments, the Attorney General launched with the S.C.I. a cooperative effort to expose these violations to public scrutiny. It was felt that, by utilizing the Commission's traditional fact-finding and public hearing functions, resultant public awareness of and concern about the situation would spur enactment of essential reforms.

Both during and after the Commission's investigation and public hearings into official abuse and misuse of the Absentee Ballot Law, constant communication was maintained with legislative and executive officials on the problem of statutory reforms. The task of closing election law loopholes to further improperities was particularly difficult because of the necessity to make required changes that would not infringe on the constitutional privilege of all eligible voters to cast a secret ballot for candidates of their choice. A series of law amendments were drafted after discussions with legislators, with affected law enforcement entities and with the Secretary of State. The Commission believes that the unity of purpose and effort by New Jersey's law enforcement community and the Legislature behind the proposed Absentee Ballot Law reforms was pivotal in the enactment of a bill implementing the Commission's recommendations in 1981.

26. INCORRECT INJURY LEAVE PRACTICES*

During the course of the Commission's investigation of county and municipal public insurance transactions, an interim public report was issued in an effort to prescribe misguided procedures that had already cost county and municipal employees at least $1 million in incorrect social security and income tax deductions during the five-year period prior to 1979 from wages paid to these employees in accordance with governmental injury leave policies. The interim report highlighted recommendations to bring an immediate halt such wrongful tax deductions and to expedite efforts to assist such employees recoup their losses before a three-year statute of limitations barred recovery for improper deductions.

As a result of the interim report's recommendations, inappropriate tax deductions were largely halted, efforts were made at both the state and county levels to assist workers in recouping losses from such deductions, the illegal double-check practice was discontinued in Burlington and Essex and a legislative effort began to amend state law to eliminate needless administrative costs of workers' compensation programs in all counties.

In the June, 1980, issue of State Government News, an article noted that nearly all of the 43 state governments that voluntarily contribute to Social Security are perhaps unnecessarily making law payments on employees' sick pay as well as on wages. The article, which noted that the Council of State Governments was monitoring this problem, made the following observation applicable to the period subsequent to the issuance of the S.C.I.'s interim report:

"Many states may be entitled to refunds for retroactive payments of FICA on sick leave under the three-year statute of limitations. New Jersey anticipates a savings of $3 million a year, and the state has claimed retroactive adjustments."

27. INADEQUATE SUDDEN DEATH INVESTIGATIONS*

In its 175-page critique of sudden death investigations, the Commission's proposed reforms emphasized the need to replace New Jersey's present 21 county medical examiners by a more professionally qualified regional system utilizing forensic pathologists as regional medical examiners. The Commission's inquiry demonstrated that a professionally adequate medical examiner function was a key element of law enforcement performance in sudden death cases. The Commission also recognized the necessity for improving the effectiveness of county prosecutor staffs and municipal police, particularly to achieve a more coordinated investigative relationship with qualified medical examiners than now exists.

During 1980 proposed revisions of the State Medical Examiners Act, and related statutes, were being developed by Deputy Attorney General William F. Bolan, Jr., chief of the Criminal Justice's Division of Educational and Legislative Services, and State Medical Examiner Robert Goode. These proposals will be subject to further review by the Governor's office, county prosecutors and medical examiners, and the S.C.I., prior to submission by the Governor of a reform bill to the Legislature.

28. QUESTIONABLE PUBLIC INSURANCE PRACTICES BY GOVERNMENTAL ENTITIES

Following a three-day public hearing, the Commission issued a 367-page report on public insurance problems and abuses in 1980. Copies of this report are available at the Commission's office.

29. ORGANIZED CRIME INFILTRATION OF DENTAL CARE ORGANIZATIONS

A three-day public hearing in December, 1980, climaxed an S.C.I. investigation that confirmed the incidence of organized crime elements into dental care plans negotiated by private entrepreneurs with certain labor unions. See Pp. 49-52 of this annual report. Copies of the Commission's full report are available at the Commission's office.

30. INVESTIGATION OF THE NEW JERSEY HOUSING FINANCE AGENCY

The Commission issued its report on its HIHA probe in April, 1981. Copies are available at the Commission's office. Also see P. 53 of this annual report.
