Preface

The 1984 edition of Capital Punishment, a serial publication in the National Prisoner Statistics (NPS) program, provides data on the Nation's death-row population and on the legal status of death penalty laws.

As in past editions, it examines basic sociodemographic classifications—age, sex, race and ethnicity, marital status at time of imprisonment, level of education, and State and region of incarceration—and describes the main judicial decisions during the past year. The criminal justice matters treated include offense, time spent on death row, and for those removed from death row, both the method of removal and status at yearend. Also reported were data on statutory changes in each jurisdiction, methods of execution, automatic appeals for persons receiving the death sentence, and whether there is a minimum age at which it can be imposed. This year's report provides data on the criminal histories of the persons on death row, such as the number with prior felony convictions and prior convictions for homicide and the criminal justice status of the offenders at time of capital offense.

Owing to the continuing interest in racial data relating to capital punishment, this report presents—within an appendix—data for 1980 through 1984 comparing the race of those arrested, imprisoned, sentenced to death, and executed for murder and also the race of the victims of homicides, rapes, and robberies.

Based on voluntary reporting, the NPS program collects and interprets data on State and Federal prisoners. Begun by the Bureau of the Census in 1926, the program was transferred to the Bureau of Prisons in 1950, the Law Enforcement Assistance Administration (LEAA) in 1971, and the Bureau of Justice Statistics (BJS) late in 1979. Since 1972, the Bureau of the Census, as the collecting agent for LEAA and BJS, has had responsibility for compiling the relevant data.

Introduction

At yearend 1984, States reported a total of 1,405 prisoners under sentence of death. During that year, 280 prisoners were received under sentence of death and 84 prisoners were removed from the population under sentence of death (including 21 prisoners executed). The 21 executions carried out during 1984 brought to 32 the total number executed since 1976 when the death penalty was affirmed in three cases before the United States Supreme Court. Since 1930, when national reporting began, 3,891 executions have been conducted under civil authority in the United States.¹

All persons under sentence of death at yearend 1984 were convicted of murder. Of the 1,405 inmates, 1,388 were male and 17 were female; 804 were white, 585 were black, and 16 were classified as other races.² The median age of those under sentence of death was 31 years and the median time since sentence was imposed was 33 months. Approximately 2 of every 3 offenders under sentence of death had a prior felony conviction; nearly 1 out of 10 had previously been convicted of homicide. About 2 out of 5 were under some criminal justice status at the time of their capital offense; half of these—20% of all those under sentence of death—were on parole, while the rest either were on probation, were prison inmates or escapees, or had pending charges.

Nearly 63% of those under sentence of death were held by States in the South. Western States accounted for an additional 21% of those sentenced to death, North Central States for 12%, and Northeastern States for 4%.

Florida had the largest number of inmates under sentence of death (215), followed by Texas (178), California (172), and Georgia (111). Of those received under sentence of death in 1984, 56% were in the South, 20% in the West, 16% in North Central States, and 8% in the Northeast. Twenty-seven States received prisoners under a sentence of death in 1984; by yearend 1984 a total of 32 states had prisoners under sentence of death.

The 21 executions in 1984 were carried out by six States: 8 in Florida, 5 in Louisiana, 3 in Texas, 2 in Georgia, 2 in North Carolina, and 1 in Virginia. Of those executed, 13 were white males, 7 were black males, and 1 was a white female. Between 1977 and 1984, about 1.4% of those under sentence of death were executed and approximately 36% received other dispositions resulting in removal from the population under sentence of death. Those executed between 1977 and 1984 spent an average of 6 years between the time the death sentence was originally imposed and the date it was carried out.

² Other races include American Indians and Asian Americans. For additional discussion of race and capital punishment see the appendix.

Legal status of the death penalty

Capital punishment in the courts

In the 1972 decision Furman v. Georgia, the Supreme Court struck down on Eighth Amendment grounds State and Federal capital punishment laws that permitted wide discretion in the application of the death penalty. In response, many States revised their statutes to conform to the guidelines in Furman. The High Court clarified these guidelines in a series of five decisions announced on July 2, 1976. In Woodson v. North Carolina and Roberts v. Louisiana the Court struck down State statutes that required mandatory imposition of the death penalty for specified crimes. As a direct consequence, mandatory death penalty provisions in 21 States were invalidated either through subsequent court action or repeal by State legislatures. This resulted in the modification (to life imprisonment) of death sentences imposed upon hundreds of offenders in these States. In three other major cases, however, the Supreme Court upheld State death penalty laws that afforded sentencing authorities discretion to impose death sentences for specified crimes (Gregg v. Georgia, Jurek v. Texas, and Proffitt v. Florida). The Court validated statutes that permitted the imposition of the death penalty after consideration of aggravating and mitigating circumstances.

Further refinements in the Court's views of State death penalty statutes were offered in cases during the late 1970's and early 1980's relating to such issues as whether rape may be punishable by death (Coker v. Georgia), mitigating factors only listed in statute (Lockett v. Ohio), excusing jurors from service (Adams v. Texas), findings by juries on lesser included offenses (Beck v. Alabama), the use of testimony from a pretrial competency hearing (Estelle v. Smith, failure to consider mitigating factors (Eddings v. Oklahoma), conviction under a statute that has been partially struck (Hopper v. Evans), jury instructions regarding possible commutation by a governor (California v. Ramos), commission of "harmless error" by sentencing judge (Barclay v. Florida), and admissibility of psychiatric evidence predicting future dangerousness (Barefoot v. Estelle).

During 1984 the U.S. Supreme Court made a key decision on the issue of proportionality in capital cases. This is the concept that States should compare each death sentence with sentences imposed in comparable cases throughout the State to determine whether similar cases are being handled in a similar way. On January 23, 1984, the Court upheld the death sentence in a California murder case, holding that a proportionality review by an appellate court was not a Constitutional requirement, even though many State death penalty laws provided for such a review (Pulley v. Harris).

On May 14, 1984, in Strickland v. Washington, the U.S. Supreme Court handed down an important decision bearing on the Sixth Amendment's guarantee of a defendant's right to "reasonably effective" counsel in capital cases. The defendant had originally appealed a Florida court's death sentence in a multiple murder case on grounds that his counsel had been ineffective in failing to seek out character witnesses or to request a psychiatric examination. The appeals to the State Supreme Court and Federal District Court were rejected because "aggravating circumstances" had justified the death penalty, and although it was conceded that the counsel had erred in failing to investigate mitigating evidence, "no prejudice" to the defendant's sentencing had resulted.

Although the Federal Court of Appeals reversed these judgments, citing the Sixth Amendment, the High Court upheld the trial court's decision on grounds that the counsel's conduct had been "reasonable" and that no omitted evidence "would have changed the conclusion that the aggravating circumstances outweighed the mitigating circumstances."

Another important issue—whether trial judges may override jury recommendations of life imprisonment and impose a death penalty—was dealt with by the High Court in Spaziano v. Florida on July 2, 1984. In this case, which involved a murder preceded by torture of the victim, the judge had overridden a jury recommendation for life imprisonment, which under Florida law was advisory only.

The High Court held that (1) it is not error for a trial judge to fail to instruct a jury on lesser included offenses when no such offense is asserted by the prosecution, (2) there is no Constitutional requirement that a jury recommendation for a life sentence in a capital case be final and preclude the trial judge from imposing the death penalty, (3) there is no Constitutional requirement that juries must decide whether the death penalty can be imposed, and (4) there is no Constitutional prohibition against jury override by a judge.

The application of the Fifth Amendment protection against "double jeopardy" in a capital sentence was decided by the High Court on May 29, 1984 (Arizona v. Rumsey). In this case the Court set aside a sentence to death. The defendant, convicted of murder committed during a robbery, had appealed to the Arizona Supreme Court against two consecutive sentences: life imprisonment for murder and 21 years for armed robbery. The State filed a cross-appeal for resentencing of the murder conviction on grounds that the trial judge had erred in not interpreting the "pecuniary gain" motive (the robbery) as an aggravating factor in the case. The State Supreme Court rejected the defendant's appeal and ruled for the State in the cross-appeal, with the result that the trial court resented the defendant to death. In response to an appeal against the death sentence, the State Supreme Court ruled again in this case, holding that the resentencing violated the "double jeopardy" clause and ordered commutation to life imprisonment (the original sentence). This decision was upheld by the U.S. Supreme Court.

Another long-standing issue relating to capital cases—the standards for excusing jurors opposed to the death penalty—was presented to the U.S. Supreme Court during October 1984 in Wainwright v. Witt. In this case, a U.S. Court of Appeals had overturned a death sentence imposed by a Florida court on grounds that the trial judge had improperly excused a juror who had expressed qualms about voting for a death sentence. The appeals court cited the High Court's decision in Witherspoon v. Illinois (1968), when it had ruled that the State could not excuse jurors simply for expressing doubts about capital punishment, since such a jury thereby might become prosecution-prone in capital cases. In Wainwright v. Witt, the U.S. Supreme Court, on January 21, 1985, reversed the appellate court's judgment, holding that the juror in this case had been properly excused. The High Court held that, as a matter of principle, any juror could be excused if his views on capital punishment were deemed by the trial judge to "prevent or substantially impair the performance of his duties."

An additional issue of importance—which was still pending at yearend 1984—was the use of research findings suggesting racial discrimination in the imposition of the death penalty. During November 1984 and January 1985, the U.S. Supreme Court lifted stays of execution which it had originally granted to two black inmates on Georgia's death row. These inmates had contended that the death penalty in Georgia was applied in a discriminatory fashion based upon the race of murder victims. In both cases, the Supreme Court gave no explanation for lifting the stays of execution. In February 1985 in McCleskey v. Kemp, however, the Federal Court of Appeals in Atlanta rejected similar charges that Georgia's death penalty was racially discriminatory. The Appeals Court held that, unless statistical statewide studies reflected a disparity so great as to compel the conclusion that there was systematic discrimination, only proof of deliberate racial prejudice in a particular case would demonstrate a Constitutional violation.

On October 11, 1983, the U.S. Court of Military Appeals, the Nation's highest military court, ruled that sentencing procedures in the Uniform Code of Military Justice did not conform to U.S. Supreme Court guidelines set down in the 1972 and 1976 landmark decisions. As a result of this decision, U.S. v. Matthews, the death sentences of seven men condemned under court-martial procedures were removed. New regulations remedying the defects in the code were promulgated in an executive order effective January 24, 1984. Under these new regulations one offender was sentenced to death by the United States military in 1984.

Capital punishment laws

At yearend 1984, 37 States and the Federal government had laws authorizing the death penalty (tables 1 and 2).³ Oregon was the only State to enact a new capital punishment law in 1984, through referendum by the voters. The death penalty was struck down in two States: New York and Massachusetts. In New York on July 2, 1984, the State Court of Appeals declared the mandatory death penalty unconstitutional in People v. Lemuel Smith, a case involving the murder of a prison guard by an inmate serving a life term. The appeals court, whose judgment was subsequently upheld by the U.S. Supreme Court on February 19, 1985, struck down the law because it did not provide for consideration by the jury of aggravating and mitigating circumstances. In Massachusetts, in a case in October 1984 involving the murder of a police officer (Commonwealth v. Colon-Cruz), the State Supreme Court held that the State law's provision for a death penalty only after a jury trial was unconstitutional on grounds that it was likely to discourage defendants from asserting the right to plead not guilty. Guilty pleas would enable defendants to avoid the risk of execution by not seeking a jury trial.

Arkansas —Article V, Chapter 15, Section 41-1501 defines capital murder as murder during the course of a prescribed felony (rape, kidnapping, arson, vehicular piracy, robbery, burglary, escape) murder of a law enforcement/public safety official in the line of duty, multiple murders, murder of candidates for public office and elected officials, murder while under sentence to life imprisonment, and contract murder.	Mississippi —Capital murder includes murder of a peace officer, murder by a life sentence inmate, murder perpetrated by bomb or explosive, contract murder, felony murder, and murder of an elected official.

New York —Because of current litigation, the New York State death penalty statute is not being enforced but the statute has not been repealed by the legislature. On 7/2/84, the statute was struck by the State Court of Appeals (63 NY 2d 41 and 479 NYS 2d 706) based on a case involving the murder of a correctional officer by an inmate (People v. Lemuel Smith). The State Court of Appeals found the mandatory death penalty statute did not provide for consideration of mitigating circumstances.

Statutory changes. During 1984, nine States altered their existing death penalty statutes. Two of the nine changed their methods of execution. South Dakota changed from electrocution to lethal injection; Wyoming, which had previously authorized lethal gas, added lethal injection as an alternative method. Florida, Missouri, and Arizona added new aggravating circumstances to their capital punishment laws. Florida included aggravated child abuse in its listing of circumstances that may aggravate homicide to "capital murder." Missouri added murders committed in the hijacking of public conveyances and murders of employees of correctional facilities. Arizona revised its statute to incorporate multiple homicides during a first-degree murder as an aggravating factor. Maryland and Colorado established separate sentencing procedures to determine whether the death sentence or life imprisonment should be imposed in murder cases and specified the aggravating or mitigating circumstances to be considered. In California the State Supreme Court limited imposition of the death penalty for murders committed during a felony to cases where it had been proven that the defendant actually intended to kill the victim. Idaho required judges to set execution dates within 1 month of sentencing and enacted other measures to eliminate delays in carrying out sentences to death.

Methods of execution. At yearend 1984, eight States provided for more than one method of execution—lethal injection and one or more alternative methods—at the election of the condemned prisoner (table 3). Electrocution (16 States) and lethal injection (15 States) were the most common methods of execution provided for in the statutes. In addition, lethal gas was permitted in eight States; hanging in four States; and a firing squad in three States. Some States, anticipating the possibility that lethal injection may be found unconstitutional, have provided for an alternative method. Each of the other four methods, previously challenged on Eighth Amendment grounds as cruel and unusual punishment, has been found to be constitutional.

Automatic review. Most capital punishment statutes provide for an automatic review of all death sentences. Some require a review of both conviction and sentence, while others require a review only of the sentence. Typically, the review is undertaken directly by the State Supreme Court. If either the conviction or sentence is vacated, the case may be remanded to the trial court for additional proceedings or retrial. It is possible that after retrial or resentencing the death sentence may be reimposed. Some statutes also allow the State Supreme Court to commute a death sentence to life imprisonment.

Minimum age. A total of 21 States specify a minimum age for which the death penalty may be imposed (table 4). In some States the minimum age is specified in the capital punishment statute; in others it is, in effect, set forth in the statutory provisions that determine the age at which a juvenile may be transferred to criminal court for trial as an adult. The most frequently specified ages are 18 years old (six States) and 14 years old (five States). Altogether, 15 States authorize capital punishment for those under 18 years old. Sixteen States and the Federal system report no specified minimum age.

Prisoners under sentence of death at yearend 1984

All persons under sentence of death at yearend 1984 were convicted of murder. The FBI's Uniform Crime Reports reveal that during the 10-year period 1975 to 1984, 204,000 Americans were victims of murder or nonnegligent manslaughter and there were an estimated 198,000 arrests for these crimes (table 5). During the same period 2,384 persons entered prisons under sentence of death and 32 offenders were executed.

At yearend 1984 States reported a total of 1,405 persons under sentence of death (table 6). States with the largest number of prisoners under sentence of death were Florida (215), Texas (178), California (172), and Georgia (111). A total of 280 persons entered prison under sentence of death in 1984 and 84 persons were removed (21 by execution). The yearend 1984 population was 16% higher than that of 1983.

While 37 States had statutes authorizing the death penalty (covering 78% of the Nation's adult population), 5 of these reported no prisoners under sentence of death at yearend (Connecticut, New Hampshire, Oregon, South Dakota, and Vermont). New York's sole death-

Note: States not listed, the District of Columbia, and New York did not have the death penalty as of 12/31/84. Some of the figures shown for yearend 1983 are revised from those shown in Capital Punishment 1983, NCJ-93925. The revised figures include 9 inmates who were reported late to the NPS program or who were not in the custody of State correctional authorities by 12/31/83 (5 in Louisiana, 2 in Pennsylvania, 1 in Georgia, and 1 in Tennessee) and exclude 2 inmates relieved of the death sentence before 12/31/83 (1 in Kentucky and 1 in Oklahoma).

row inmate at yearend 1983 was removed during 1984 as a result of a court decision invalidating the death penalty statute. Oregon was the only State to adopt the death penalty during 1984.

Of the 1,405 persons under sentence of death at yearend 1984, more than three-fifths were in the South. An additional 21% were confined in correctional facilities in the West, 12% in the North Central States, and 4% in the Northeast. Nearly all were males (98.8%) and most were white (57.2%) (table 7). Blacks constituted 41.6% of those under sentence of death, and another 1.1% were American Indians or Asian Americans. States reported 89 Hispanics under sentence of death, 6.3% of the total. The largest numbers of Hispanics were held in States with relatively large Hispanic populations: Texas (29), California (26), Florida (10), and 7 each in Arizona and Illinois.

The median age of those under sentence of death was 31 years old. Less than 1% (11 offenders) were under the age of 20 and 1.7% (24 offenders) were 55 or older. The youngest was 17 and the oldest was 76. About 1 in 10 inmates had not gone beyond seventh grade, but a similar proportion had some college education. Approximately a third were married, a fifth were divorced or separated, and two-fifths had never been married.

Those admitted to and removed from the population of prisoners under sentence of death in 1984 mirrored those present at yearend with respect to basic demographic characteristics as well as educational attainment and marital status. As might be expected those admitted were younger and those removed were older.

The 17 women under sentence of death at yearend 1984 (1.2% of the total) were held in 12 States, with no State holding more than 2 women (table 8). Since 1972, a total of 15 States have had women under a sentence of death. Since 1976 one woman has been executed.

Entries and removals of persons under sentence of death

During 1984, 27 States reported new entries under sentence of death (table 6). Florida reported the largest number (38), followed by California (27) and Ohio (17).

Of the 280 entries under sentence of death—

- all were convicted of murder;
- 158 were white males, 111 were black males, and 3 were males of other races;
- 6 were white females, 1 was a black female, and 1 was a female of another race;
- 17 were Hispanic.

Twenty States reported a total of 84 persons removed from the population of prisoners under a sentence of death in 1984. Florida reported the largest number of removals, 16 (8 by execution), followed by North Carolina with 8 (1 by execution), and Arizona and Louisiana each with 7 (5 by execution in Louisiana).

Of the 84 prisoners removed from the population of those under a sentence of death in the States—

- 40 had their sentences lifted but convictions upheld;
- 21 were executed by six States;
- 16 had their sentences and convictions vacated;

- 4 died by suicide;
- 1 had his sentence commuted;
- 1 had his sentence lifted when the State statute was struck down;⁴
- 1 was transferred from one State (California) to another State (Nevada) where he was also under sentence of death.

Of the 58 prisoners whose death sentences were overturned, 30 had been resentenced to life imprisonment by yearend 1984, 2 had been resentenced to terms longer than 20 years, 15 were awaiting new trials, 10 were awaiting resentencing, and in 1 case no further prosecution was sought.

From 1977, the year after the Supreme Court reinstated the death penalty, through 1984, a total of 1,813 persons have entered prison under a sentence of death and 828 persons have been removed from the population under a sentence of death (32 by execution). Of those admitted 58% were white (1,046) and 41% were black (746); of those removed 56% were white (467) and 43% were black (356).

Criminal history of death-row inmates in 1984

Of those under sentence of death at yearend 1984 for whom such information was known, two-thirds had prior felony convictions preceding the capital offense (table 9). Nearly 1 in 10 had a prior conviction for homicide. (Where the information was reported for those with prior felony convictions, approximately 1 out of 6 had previously been convicted of homicide.)

Nearly 2 of every 5 prisoners sentenced to death had an active criminal justice status at the time of their capital offense. Half of these—20% of all those under sentence of death—were on parole, while the rest were either on probation (5%), were prison inmates (3%) or escapees (3%), or had pending charges (6%). Excluding those with pending charges, nearly 1 in 3 was already under sentence for another crime when the capital murder occurred.

The criminal history patterns were similar for whites and blacks, although somewhat higher proportions of blacks than whites had prior felony convictions, prior homicide convictions, or were on parole at the time of the capital offense.

⁴The only prisoner under sentence of death in New York in 1984 was removed for this reason.

Executions

Since 1930, when data on executions were first collected by the Federal government, 3,891 executions have been conducted under civil authority (table 10). Since the death penalty was reinstated by the Supreme Court in 1976, the States have executed 32 persons.

After 1967, an unofficial moratorium on executions prevailed while legal challenges to the death penalty were pressed at various court levels. There were no executions until 1977, when one occurred, followed by two more in 1979, one in 1981, two in 1982, and five in 1983. In 1984 there were 21 executions.

Since 1977, a total of 2,233 offenders have been under a death sentence for varying periods of time (table 11). There were 32 executions and 796 removals for other reasons (most because the State statute or their particular sentence was overturned). A slightly higher proportion of whites than blacks were executed during this period; removal rates for the two races were virtually identical.

Of those executed since 1977, five were under a sentence of death for 3 years or less and five for 8 years or longer (table 12). The average for the 32 executed offenders was 6 years. For executed whites the average amount of time under a sentence of death was about 10 months less than for executed blacks. (For additional discussion of race and capital punishment see the appendix.)

Methodological note

The statistics reported in this bulletin may differ from data collected by other organizations for any of the following reasons: (1) Inmates are not added to the National Prisoner Statistics death-row counts at the time the court hands down the sentence, but rather when they are admitted to a State or Federal correctional facility. (2) Inmates sentenced to death under statutory provisions later found unconstitutional are removed from the death-row count on the date of the relevant court finding rather than on the date the finding is applied to the individual case. Thus, persons who are technically still under a sentence of death but who are no longer at risk are not counted. (3) NPS death-row counts are always for the last day of the calendar year and thus will differ from counts for more recent periods.

Note: Figures for 1980 through 1983 have been revised from those reported in Capital Punishment, 1983, NPS Bulletin SD-NPS-CP-12, December 1984. In addition, as a result of a major procedural change regarding dispositions, the number of dispositions other than execution and the number of persons under sentence of death in 1976 and subsequent years are not strictly comparable to corresponding data for earlier years. See Methodology for explanations.

Note: This table identifies the legal or other event effectively terminating the death sentence. Status as of reporting date is indicated in table 18.

- Represents zero.

¹Persons in this category are subject to further administrative and legal steps before final disposition. This process could result, for example, in a commutation of sentence or in the vacation of sentence with either affirmation or voiding of conviction (see footnote 3 for further discussion).

²The category "Death Other than Execution" includes four deaths which were suicides (two in Florida and one each in Indiana and California).

³Commutation effects an immediate change in sentence from death to life or a term of years.

⁴Persons whose capital sentence is vacated or whose capital sentence and conviction are vacated are subject to further legal proceedings (such as resentencing if the conviction has been vacated) to determine their ultimate disposition. Neither the vacating of the sentence nor the vacating of both sentence and conviction precludes the possibility of reimposition of the death sentence.

⁵The category "Other" reflects one person under a sentence of death in California who was transferred to Nevada where he is also under a sentence of death.

Note: This table identifies the status of persons removed from death row during the year as of reporting date. Disposition is final only for those who are serving reduced sentences, are deceased, have been found not guilty, or who have had all charges on the capital offense dropped. Persons in each of the other categories are subject to further legal proceedings prior to final disposition.

- Represents zero.

¹The category "Deceased" includes 25 deaths. Twenty-one deaths by execution (Virginia, North Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Louisiana, and Texas); four were suicides (two in Florida and one each in Indiana and California).

²The category "Other" reflects one person under a sentence of death in California who was transferred to Nevada where he is also under a sentence of death.

Note: For persons who were resentenced to death during 1984 after having been relieved of the death sentence prior to 1984, the time elapsed is calculated from the most recent sentence date only; thus, the person's total time on death row is understated. There were two such cases in Virginia (one originally sentenced in 1978, removed in 1982, one sentenced in 1981, removed in 1983) and resentenced to death in 1984; one in Pennsylvania (sentenced in 1979, removed in 1983); one in Kentucky (sentenced in 1980, removed in 1982); one in Tennessee (sentenced in 1980, removed in 1983); and one in Nebraska (sentenced in 1980, removed in 1983); and one in South Carolina (sentenced in 1980, removed in 1983) and resentenced in 1984. For those persons relieved of the death sentence and resentenced within the same year, time elapsed is calculated from the original sentence date and, thus, is slightly overstated. There were no such cases reported for 1984.

- Represents zero.

(B) Does not meet publication standards because medians are not computed for States having four or fewer persons under sentence of death.

¹The longest amount of time served on death row by those under sentence of death at the end of 1983 was 131 months, served by a Black inmate sentenced in January 1974 in Florida.

²Eleven inmates enumerated under "All Other Races" were American Indian and five were Asian.

Methodology

This report is based mainly on data obtained through a mail canvass of the Federal Bureau of Prisons and correctional authorities in the 50 States and the District of Columbia. Information on the legal status of the death penalty and on methods of execution was obtained through a questionnaire mailed to the office of the Attorney General of each jurisdiction. All responded.

Capital Punishment covers all persons under sentence of death at any time during the year and held in a State or Federal nonmilitary correctional facility. The coverage includes capital offenders transferred from prison to such noncorrectional institutions as mental hospitals and those who may have escaped from custody (no such prisoners were reported for 1984). Not included are capital prisoners who for any reason remain in local correctional institutions outside the jurisdiction of the State or Federal correctional authorities from whom data for this series are obtained.

A major procedural change introduced in 1976 was continued through 1984. Beginning with 1976, inmates sentenced to death under statutory provisions later found unconstitutional are removed from the death-row count at the time of the relevant court finding rather than when the finding is applied to the individual case, as had been the practice before 1976. As a result of this change, statistics for two items for 1976 and after are not strictly comparable with statistics for those prior to 1976. The items are—

- the length of time elapsed from sentencing to disposition in the case of those removed from under the death penalty, and
- the amount of time expired since sentencing in the case of those still on death row at yearend.

This change also precludes strict comparability between data for 1976 and after and pre-1976 data on the number of persons removed from death row and on individuals remaining under sentence of death at yearend.

Two other changes in concept and format differentiate 1977-84 information from data reported in earlier issues of this report. For persons removed from death row, respondents were asked, as in previous years, to supply information about disposition. Prior to 1971, the "method of disposition" was displayed exactly as reported to the NPS program (e.g., indictment dismissed or judgment reversed, commuted to life or term of years, resentenced to life or term of years, new trial granted or resentencing ordered, etc.). Between 1971 and 1975, the specific method of disposition reported by respondents was not tabulated in the report; rather, persons removed from the death row count were listed under one of two categories: "removed from death row" or "died." In 1976, a single table displayed either the method of removal or, in the case of inmates who had undergone further processing after removal from death row, the yearend status (see table 12, Capital Punishment 1976). Beginning in 1977, respondents were asked to report, for each person relieved of the death sentence, both the "method of removal" (table 17) and the "yearend status" in the followup process (table 18). In 1976, for example, a prisoner whose capital sentence was vacated as a result of the nullification of a death penalty statute and who received a reduced sentence before yearend was tallied only once, under "reduction of sentence" (table 12, Capital Punishment 1976); beginning in 1977, a prisoner experiencing this sequence of events was tallied both in table 17 (under "sentence provisions of State statute struck down") and in table 18 (under "serving reduced sentence"). Because method of disposition information beginning in 1977 included both method of removal and yearend status for each prisoner relieved of the death sentence, it is not comparable with that for 1976 nor with that for the years prior to 1971. Because no detail was published in the 1971 through 1975 issues, no such comparison is possible.

A second procedural change was initiated in the 1977 issue of this report to improve the methods of revision and removals of capital prisoners reported a year or more late to the NPS program. Previously, such transactions were simply added to or deleted from the January 1 count of the year in which the report was received, without, however, adjusting the data on admissions, removals, or net yearend figures for the year in which the transactions actually occurred. Beginning with the 1977 report, the relevant data are presented to reflect such adjustments, and figures for previous years have been comparably revised to provide a consistent basis for assessing historical trends (table 6). Because of the time lag likely to occur between the receipt of the death penalty and transfer to a State correctional facility, the figures for recent years are subject to revision.

The collection of data on ethnicity (i.e., Hispanic or non-Hispanic origin) started with the 1977 enumeration, and the characteristic is determined irrespective of race. Hispanic origin is defined in the instruction to item 4b, Form NPS-8. The count of Hispanic inmates may be subject to error, as correctional authorities in some jurisdictions maintain such information as a matter of record, whereas those in other jurisdictions make a determination solely on the basis of surname inspection.

Overall, coverage on questions of legal status at time of arrest and prior felony history has been available for about 8 out of 10 prisoners since these items were first incorporated in the questionnaire in 1977.

The 1984 questionnaire was the fifth to ask for information on homicide convictions for inmates with a history of prior felonies (see item 10b, Form NPS-8). For those under sentence at yearend, the type of felony was reported in 79% of the cases, up from 70% the previous year. For those removed from death row during 1984, coverage was inadequate (60%), but was better (97%) for those newly sentenced to death.

For the fourth year in a row, States reported whether their death penalty laws provided for an automatic appeal from death sentences (see Item 7, Form NPS-8B and NPS-8C); coverage for this item was complete.
