This nineteenth issue of this report documents over twenty-two years of the death sentencing of female offenders under modern death penalty statutes in the United States. In 1988 I began to generate these reports in order to monitor this phenomenon. With the gracious assistance of so many people, more and more errors are edited out with each edition so that the data reported in each issue is intended to replace any inconsistent data reported in an earlier issue.

As of this writing, the death penalty for women is back in the headlines. The state of South Carolina is seeking the death penalty against Susan Smith, accused of drowning her young children last year. This is an unusual case, in that the death penalty for a mother who murders her own children is quite rare. Only eight (7%) of the 107 death sentences imposed upon female offenders since 1973 have been for the murder of their own children, and only four (10%) of the forty-two women offenders now under death sentences have committed such crimes. Attention has also been drawn to the cases of Guinevere Garcia in Illinois and Pamela Perillo in Texas, both presently scheduled for execution in September 1995. While both of these scheduled executions are far from certain to occur, the death penalty for female offenders in the United States seems once again to be of national and international interest.

In general, both the female death sentencing rate and the female death row population remain very small in comparison to that for males. Actual execution of female offenders is quite rare, with only about 520 documented instances beginning with the first in 1632. These 520 female executions constitute less than 3% of the total of approximately 19,000 confirmed executions since 1608. The last female offender executed was Velma Barfield in North Carolina on November 2, 1984, the only female among the nearly 300 offenders executed in the post-Furman era (1973 - present). Prior to this current era, the last female offender executed was Elizabeth Ann Duncan, executed by California on August 8, 1962. The annual rate of death sentences for female offenders has remained around five (2% of the annual total) for many years.

FEMALE DEATH SENTENCES IMPOSED, 1973 - 1995:

The current American death penalty era began when new death penalty statutes were passed following the Supreme Court's decision in Furman in 1972, which in effect struck down all then-existing death penalty statutes. Sentencing began under the new statutes in 1973 and continues through today. Although the constitutionality of these current era statutes was not recognized formally by the United States Supreme Court until 1976 in Gregg and actual executions did not begin until 1977, the current era of sentencing began in 1973.

Table 1 on the next page lists the sentences imposed each year according to the Bureau of Justice Statistics and to my research.

A total of 107 female death sentences have been imposed, about 2% of the total of estimated 5,434 death sentences for all offenders.

 Estimates

 As of June 30, 1995

Despite some fluctuations particularly in the early years of this period, the death sentencing rate for female offenders was typically about five per year beginning in the 1980s. In 1989 this annual death sentencing rate doubled for reasons unknown. In 1990 and 1991, the sentencing rate seemed to have returned to just above the pre-1989 levels. Then the rate surged to ten in 1992, portending an annual rate again nearly double that of the 1980s. This is nearly 4% of the death sentences imposed in 1992, suggesting a significant increase in the rate of the death sentencing of female offenders. However, four of these ten female death sentences in 1992 were imposed on the same person (Aileen Wuornos in Florida), leaving only six other female death sentences during 1992. Total female death sentences then returned to the normal level -- five in 1993 and five in 1994. Apparently no women have been sentenced to death yet in 1994. In any event, the number of female offenders sentenced to prison death rows each year remains under 0.2% of the approximately 3,700 women sentenced to prison each year.

Of these 107 death sentences for female offenders, only forty-two sentences (imposed upon thirty-nine females) remain currently in effect (see Table 3 below). One such sentence resulted in an execution (Velma Barfield) and another sixty-four death sentences were reversed or commuted to life imprisonment. Thus, for the sixty-five death sentences finally resolved (excluding the forty-two still in effect and still being litigated), the reversal rate for female death sentences in the current era is over 98% (64/65).

These 107 death sentences for female offenders have been imposed in twenty-three individual states, comprising well over half of the death penalty jurisdictions during this time period. Table 2 on the next page lists all death penalty jurisdictions which have imposed death sentences on female offenders since 1973.

As Table 2 indicates, two states (Florida and North Carolina) account for one-quarter of all such sentences. The first ten states have imposed three-quarters of female death sentences. These dominant sentencing states range from North Carolina to California and from Texas and Florida to Ohio.

Appendix A to this report (pp. 7-11) provides a more detailed listing of name, race, jurisdiction, dates of crimes and sentences, and current status for each female death sentence. While the sources of this information are many, the major sources are the outstanding data gathering effort of the NAACP Legal Defense and Education Fund, Inc. (particularly their newsletter, Death Row, U.S.A.), and the equally fine monitoring effort of the National Coalition to Abolish the Death Penalty.

CURRENT FEMALE DEATH ROW INMATES:

Of the 107 death sentences imposed upon 101 offenders since 1973, only forty-two females remain on the death rows of fifteen states (see Table 3 on the next page). These forty-two female offenders on death row constitute only 1.4% of the total death row population of over 3,000 persons and less than 0.1% of the approximately 50,000 women in prison in the United States.

Nearly two-thirds of the women on death row are white. One fourth were in their forties or older at the time of their crimes, with the total age range remarkably from eighteen to sixty-seven. Over two-thirds of their victims were white, and over two-thirds were adult males (where these data are known). The most typical crimes of these women involved the murder of the offender's husband or lover. Several of these female offenders were battered women who killed their batterers or victims chosen by their batterers.

The present ages of these forty-two female death row inmates range from twenty-one to seventy-six. They have been on death row from three months to over thirteen years. Despite the statistically high probability (over 98%) that death-sentenced female offenders will never be executed, some of these women have nearly exhausted their appeals. Guinevere Garcia in Illinois and Pamela Perillo in Texas both have execution dates presently scheduled for September 1995. Whether or not either of these executions actually occur in September, another execution of a female offender seems likely within the next few years.

Appendix B to this report (pp. 12-15) sets forth the names of these offenders and some brief details about their crimes and sentences. Multiple sentencing dates mean that the earlier death sentence was reversed but then a new death sentence was imposed.
