

Changes to the National Drug Control Budget

Substance abuse takes a significant toll on the public health, public safety and financial resources of the United States. As a result, President Obama's National Drug Control Strategy outlines a comprehensive approach to reducing drug use and its consequences by endorsing a balance of prevention, treatment, and law enforcement, and restoring balance between demand and supply reduction programs.

Recognizing the complex nature of the drug problem and its solutions, the Obama Administration has restructured the Federal drug control budget to more accurately represent the full range of Federal spending, including costs associated with the consequences of drug use. Based on a thorough review of drug control related programs, the Administration will now include several new agencies/programs to the National Drug Control Budget.

The new programs are now included as a part of the National Drug Control Strategy: FY 2012 Budget and Performance Summary (which will be released with the 2011 National Drug Control Strategy). The restructuring effort includes the development of performance measures that monitor each new agency's contribution to the Strategy. ONDCP is currently working with agencies to identify current measures that may be appropriate and to develop new metrics where necessary. Over the next year, the Administration will review a number of programs that work on the drug control issue but were not included in the budget re-structure because of their budget estimation methodology. Some of these programs include:

- The Department of Defense's TRICARE prevention and treatment efforts
- The Department of Health and Human Service's Centers for Disease Control and Prevention
- The Department of Housing and Urban Development's Project Reunite
- The Department of Justice's Byrne Memorial Justice Assistance Grant program
- The Department of Labor's Job Corps program

The National Drug Control Strategy: FY 2012 Budget and Performance Summary reflects the new budget structure and framework, providing an inclusive and true description of the Federal contribution dedicated to the drug-control mission. The following chart provides a comparison of the old and the new budget structure.

	Previous Budget Structure			Revised Budget Structure
